PREFACE.

THIS work is designed to be what its title imports; a book of reference. We do not say that we have collected all that can be said on the subjects treated, but we think we have collected all that is important that has been said in favor of, or in opposition to, the views generally entertained by Universalists. That the subjects discussed in this volume are important, no one will dispute. We have endeavored to treat them candidly and fairly, and to present in a condensed form all the information which we possess concerning them. We have expressed our opinions freely, frankly and boldly. These opinions are the result of years of careful, patient, persevering and untiring investigation. We have long seen and felt the necessity of a work like this, and for years have been collecting together materials for it, and now present it to the public. We lay claim to but little of originality, except for the design, the arrangement, and the manner of discussing the various subjects treated. Most of the ideas contained in this book have, no doubt, been expressed by others; but in no case have we intentionally adopted the language of others without giving credit. If we had been ambitious to acquire literary fame, this work would never have been published. Our chief aim has been usefulness. How far we have succeeded in accomplishing our object, the public must judge. We have endeavored to speak forth the words of truth and soberness, and to communicate our ideas in the plain, unvarnished language of truth. Whatever other faults may be found in this book, we think no man will say that the ideas and sentiments of the writers are not clearly expressed in it. To those who wish to compose sermons on the subjects treated upon here, this work will be convenient; as all the scriptures, and facts, and arguments, &c., will be before them at one view. This will save them a vast amount of time and labor, which would otherwise have to be spent in hunting up proofs, facts, authorities, &c. To those who are engaged in public discussion, either oral or written, it will be invaluable for the same reasons. And to the general reader, especially those who have but little time, and perhaps as little inclination, to investigate these subjects as thoroughly as the importance of them demands, it may perhaps communicate some valuable, important, and useful instruction. If it shall accomplish the above objects, and be instrumental in promoting the great cause of truth and righteousness, we shall be satisfied. The question with us has not been, what did our ancestors believe? but what is truth? The present is the age of controversy; and the motto of the people is, "Give us facts." For the opinions herein expressed we hold ourselves responsible to the public; and we ask for them a candid consideration. If any man feels disposed to controvert them, he must invalidate the facts and arguments upon which our opinions are based. If we hold any opinions which are erroneous, we shall feel under peculiar obligations to the man who will point them out and prove them to be false. We hold ourselves in readiness to examine whatever may be said in opposition to our views, and will either acknowledge ourselves mistaken, or stand up in their defence.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

The first edition of the Book of Reference was issued in 1844, and met with a ready sale. The edition was exhausted about five years since, and, as the work was not stereotyped, the original publishers did not feel disposed to run the risk of issuing another. The call for the work for the few years past, from all parts of the country, has been constant and urgent; and, with the belief that in its revised and improved form it is calculated to do great good, it is now offered to the public.

Boston, September, 1853.

2 Peter 2: 4. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment.

SECTION VII.

Statement of facts, showing that the sacred writers did not use the words SHEOL, HADES, TARTAROS, and GEHENNA, to signify a place of ENDLESS MISERY.

SHEOL. — This word occurs sixty-four times in the Bible, and is rendered thirty-two times hell, twenty-nine times grave, and three times pit. That it does not signify a place of endless misery is evident from the following facts.

1. The connection of those passages where it is rendered hell shows that no reference is had to a future state of existence. Therefore, there is no proof that this hell is in any other world than the one in which we live. The first time it is rendered hell, and of course the first time the word hell occurs in the Bible, is in Deut. 32: 22. By examining the hell there spoken of, it will be seen that it was the "lowest hell," and that it was to "consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Here fire is evidently used as a figure of punishment. The nature of this punishment may be learned from verse twenty-four. "They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction: I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with poison of serpents of the dust." All this was of course to take place here on the earth. The next time it is rendered hell is in 2 Sam. 22: 6, where David says, "The sorrows of hell compassed me about," &c. The nature of this hell may be learned from verse seven. "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried to my God." Again, in Ps. 18: 5, David says, "The sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me." Verse 6, "In my distress I called upon the Lord," &c. In Ezek. 32: 27, hell plainly signifies the literal grave. "And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads." If the reader will examine every passage where the word sheol occurs, and is rendered hell, with the connection in which they are found, he will see no reason for supposing this hell to be in another world.

2. Both David and Jonah are represented as being in hell, and David is not only represented as being in hell, but as being in the lowest hell; and yet both of these individuals were alive, and on the earth. Jonah 2: 2, "Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice." Certainly, Jonah could not cry out of the belly of hell unless he was in hell. By consulting verse one, it will be seen that this hell was the fish's belly. Ps. 116: 3, "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me." To learn the nature of this hell, see the next words. "I found trouble and sorrow." Ps. 86: 12, 13, "I will praise thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart; and I will glorify thy name forevermore. For great is thy mercy towards me; and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell." We learn from this that it is not necessary to go into another world to find the lowest hell. Unless it can be shown that there is a hell lower than the lowest, it is in vain to talk about any other hell than that which exists in this world. It is sometimes said that "from hell there is no redemption." But we here read of a man who was redeemed from the lowest hell.

3. God is represented as being in hell. Ps. 139 : 8, "If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou (God) art there." Hell here signifies the invisible state of the dead ; or perhaps the literal grave. The obvious meaning of the psalmist is, that death could not carry him beyond the reach of God's presence.

4. David and Jonah are not only represented as having been in hell and as having been delivered from it, but the soul of David is spoken of as having been delivered from hell. Ps. 30 : 3, "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave" (sheol). By soul, here, David evidently means himself, his own person ; and by sheol, the literal grave, or invisible state of the dead. See the next words : "Thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit."

5. God is represented as bringing men up from sheol. 1 Sam. 2 : 6, "He (God) bringeth down to the grave (sheol), and bringeth up." By those who believe in a place of endless misery, called hell, in a future world, it is thought that when once a person gets to hell his doom is sealed forever, and that there is no prospect of his ever coming up. But, if sheol in the text just quoted means a place of endless misery, this opinion must be given up.

6. God is not only represented as bringing men up from sheol, but the Psalmist expresses satisfaction in the prospect of the redemption of his soul from sheol. Ps. 49 : 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (sheol). Now, if the word soul here means the immortal part of man, and the word sheol a place of misery after death, then it needs no proof that the Psalmist expected that the soul would go to this hell, and afterwards be delivered from it.

7. The patriarch Jacob expressed himself as if he expected to go to sheol. See Gen. 37 : 35, 42 : 38, and 44 : 31. But does any man believe that this good old man expected to go to a place of either limited or endless misery after death ? Certainly not. But, if sheol signifies a place of misery after death, Jacob certainly expected to go there.

8. To suppose that sheol signifies a place of endless misery after death, is to suppose that David, so far from being a man "after God's own heart," was a perfect monster in cruelty. In 1 Kings

2 : 6, he enjoins it upon his son Solomon not to let the "hoar head of Joab go down to the grave (sheol) in peace." In verse 9 he enjoins it upon him to "bring down the hoar head of Shimei to the grave (sheol) with blood." And in Ps. 55 : 15, he says of his enemies, "Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell" (sheol).

9. The pious and patient Job prays that he might be hid in sheol. See Job 14 : 13. But, is it to be supposed that Job wished to be hid in a place of endless misery?

10. Sheol is represented as a place from the power of which it is impossible for any man, good or bad, to deliver himself. Ps. 89 : 48, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave (sheol)?" This question is one which was designed to involve its own answer, and that answer was designed to be a negative one. Hence, if we understand the words soul and sheol here as they have been commonly understood, then the text affirms that the souls of all men will go to a place of endless misery.

11. The bones of the Jewish people are represented as being scattered at the mouth of sheol. See Ps. 141 : 7. But, is it to be believed that the bones of these people were scattered at the mouth of a place of endless misery in another world?

12. Sheol is represented as a place where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." See Eccl. 9 : 10. But, if there is no work there, of course it cannot be a place where devils are at work tormenting men. If there is no device there, it cannot be a place where devils are contriving how they may best torment their subjects. And if there is no knowledge there, of course it cannot be a place of misery.

13. The good old king Hezekiah, during his sickness, expressed himself as if he should die, and go to sheol. See Isa. 38 : 10. But no man believes that Hezekiah expected to go to a place of endless misery.

14. Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and their company, and their wives and their little ones, are represented as having gone down alive into sheol. See Num. 16 : 27—33. Here we learn that it is not even necessary to die in order to go to sheol. And, as these persons went alive into sheol, — that is, went into sheol while living, — hence this sheol must have been in this world.

15. God speaks in the Bible of ransoming mankind from sheol. Hosea 13 : 17, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave" (sheol). By those who believe in a place of endless misery it is thought that for those who will be doomed to that gloomy prison of despair there can be no ransom. But this text certainly teaches that for those who were in sheol there was a ransom.

16. Sheol is destined to be destroyed. Hosea 13 : 17, "O grave (sheol), I will be thy destruction." Now, whether this sheol is in this world or another, or whether it is a place of misery or not, one thing is certain: it is destined to be destroyed. The reader will bear in mind that this is the only word rendered hell in the Old Testament. How can that be a place of endless misery which is itself to come to an end, and cease to exist?

17. Sheol and Saul are synonymous in their meaning. Saul is merely a different pronunciation of the word sheol, in consequence of its being differently pointed. Now, one of the kings of Israel, and one of the apostles of Christ, were both named Saul. If the parents of king Saul, and the parents of Saul of Tarsus, had understood sheol to mean a place of either limited or endless misery, is it likely they would have named one of their children after such a place? What parent, in our day, would name a child hell, and at the same time understand this word to mean a place of endless misery? The parents of the persons referred to above undoubtedly understood the word sheol in its true sense, namely, "to crave, to demand, to ask," or that in relation to which we desired information, as the unseen or invisible state of the dead.

18. Sheol is denominated a pit. Ps. 88 : 3, 4, "My life draweth nigh unto the grave (sheol). I am counted with them that go down into the pit." Prov. 1 : 12, "Let us swallow them up alive, as the grave; and whole, as those that go down to the pit." See, also, Isa. 14 : 15; and 38 : 18, 19; Ezek. 31 : 16. It was customary among the Jews to deposit their dead in deep pits, or caves, which were numerous in their country, frequently extending far under ground, and which were sufficiently capacious to contain a large number of dead bodies. Hence arose the expression "depths of sheol," or "deepest sheol;" and hence it is that sheol is denominated a pit. The allusion, in the above texts, evidently is to the manner in which the Jews were accustomed to dispose of their dead, and not to a place of endless misery.

19. Sheol is said to have a mouth, or place of entrance. See Ps. 141 : 7 ; Isa. 5 : 14. The allusion is to the mouth of the caves in which the Jews deposited their dead.

20. Sheol is said to have bars. Job 17 : 16, "They shall go down to the bars of the pit" (sheol). Here is an allusion to the fact that the burial-places of the Jews, or, rather, the entrances to them, were guarded by bars and gates.

21. Sheol is spoken of as having sides. Isa. 14 : 15, "Thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit." The allusion is to the fact that the Hebrews often deposited their dead, and in great numbers, too, in places excavated from the side of the cave, or pit, which was selected as the burial-place.

22. Sheol is associated with the base of mountains. See Deut. 32 : 22. The burial-places of the Jews were sometimes located at the base of mountains, and in the mountains' sides. In the text just quoted the allusion is to this fact.

23. The inmates of sheol are said to be in the dust. Job 17 : 16, "They shall go down to the bars of the pit (sheol), where our rest together is in the dust." If the word sheol here signifies a place of endless misery, then this text teaches us that, so far from this place being located in the spirit world, it is located in the dust of the earth.

24. Sheol is spoken of as a place of resort to escape punishment. Amos 7 : 2, "Though they dig into hell, thence shall my hand take them." "The allusion is to the escape of criminals from the officers of justice. They might dig into the pits and caves of the earth (the burial-places), yet the omniscient eye of God could not be eluded, nor his justice evaded." The criminal, then, instead of being sent to sheol to be punished, was to be brought out to receive the merited punishment. This idea, although plainly inculcated by the Bible, is at direct variance with the common opinion.

25. The contents of sheol are said to be : 1. Gray hairs, Gen. 37 : 35, and 42 : 38, and 44 : 29, 31 ; 2. Hoary heads, 1 Kings 2 : 6, 9 ; 3. Bones, Ps. 141 : 7 ; 4. Sheep, Ps. 49 : 14 ; 5. Houses and goods, Num. 16 : 32, 33 ; 6. Swords and other weapons of war, Ezek. 32 : 27. Surely no one will contend that these things are contained in a place of endless misery, in the spirit world!

26. The inmates of sheol are called the dead, the slain, etc., Isa. 14 : 9 ; Ezek. 31 : 17, and 32 : 21. Certainly it could not be said of immortal souls, in a place of endless misery, that they were dead, slain, etc. This language was evidently used with reference to those whose animal life had been destroyed, and whose dead bodies had been consigned to the grave.

27. Sheol is used to signify a state of moral impurity, 2 Sam. 22 : 6; Ps. 18 : 5, and 30 : 3, and 84 : 13, and 116 : 3; Prov. 23 : 14, and 5 : 5, and 9 : 18; Isa. 57 : 9. The grave is a place of physical defilement and death, and might, therefore, with great propriety, be used as an emblem of moral impurity, defilement and death.

28. Sheol is often used as a term synonymous with death, Isa. 38 : 18, and 28 : 15, 18; Ps. 55 : 15; Cant. 8 : 6; Prov. 5 : 5; Hosea 13 : 14. Death precedes, the grave follows in quick succession. Hence the propriety of using the terms death and grave as synonymous.

29. The inmates of sheol are said to consume and vanish away, and to be eaten up of worms, Job 7 : 9, and 24 : 19; Ps. 49 : 14. Do the believers in a place of endless misery believe that immortal souls will there consume, vanish away, and be eaten up of worms? Surely this language can have no other reference than to the dead bodies of men after they are deposited in the grave.

30. Sheol is spoken of as a place of rest. Job 17 : 16, "They shall go down to the bars of the pit (sheol), where our rest together is in the dust." A place of misery could not certainly be regarded as a place of rest. Hence sheol here does not signify such a place.

31. Sheol is spoken of as a place of silence, Ps. 31 : 17. If it be a place of silence, then it cannot be a place from which the cries, groans, shrieks, howlings, imprecations and blasphemies, of the damned will be forever ascending.

32. Sheol is spoken of as a place of absolute and entire unconsciousness. Ps. 6 : 5, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave (sheol) who shall give thee thanks?" Isa. 38 : 18, "The grave (sheol) cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee." Eccl. 9 : 10, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest." It needs no argument to prove that a place of utter unconsciousness cannot be a place of either limited or endless misery.

33. Sheol is used as synonymous with Keber. Is. 14 : 11, "Thy pomp is brought down to the grave (sheol), and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." Verse 19, "But thou art cast out of thy grave (keber) like an abominable branch, and as the remnant of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcass trodden under feet." Ezek. 32: 21—27, "The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell (sheol), with them that help him; they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Asshur is there, and all her company; his graves (keber) are about him, all of them slain, fallen by the sword. Whose graves (keber) are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave (keber); all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living. There is Elam, and all her multitude round about her grave (keber), all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet they have borne their shame with them that go down to the pit. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude; her graves (keber) are round about him. . . . . There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude; her graves (keber) are round about him. . . . . And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads; but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living."

All admit that the Hebrew word keber signifies the literal grave. Every one can see that in the above texts sheol and keber are used as synonymous terms. In Isa. 14: 11, it is said of the king of Babylon, "Thy pomp is brought down to the grave (sheol), and the noise of thy viols; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." In verse 19 he is said to be cast out of his grave (keber) "as an abominable branch, as a carcass trodden under foot." The worms of sheol, and the carcass in keber, have the same reference. The expression, sides of the pit, used in connection with sheol, verse 15, and the stones of the pit, mentioned in connection with keber, verse 19, are evidently the same. The dead of sheol, verse 9 of this chapter, and the slain of keber, verse 19, signify precisely the same thing.

In Ezek. 32: 21, 27, the inmates of sheol are said to be slain, to be laid with the uncircumcised, and to have their swords laid under their heads. In verses 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, the same or similar expressions are used in connection with keber. The only difference in the usage of these terms is, that, whereas sheol is always used in the singular number, keber is often used in the plural number. But it must be borne in mind that sheol was the common receptacle of all the dead, good, bad, and indifferent. All went to sheol, whether they were buried in tombs, sepulchres graves, caves or pits; yea, whether they were burned with fire devoured by wild beasts, or left unburied. Sheol signifies the state of the dead in general; it does not signify a particular grave. It was not a thing of individual appropriation, as the grave, or keber, was, but a state or condition common to all the dead. It was very proper, then, that it should be used in the singular number; for, although the graves, or kebers, were many, there was but one sheol for all.

34. If the reader will examine every passage where the word sheol occurs, he will see that it is used in two different senses, the one literal, and the other figurative. It is used in a literal sense to signify the grave, or, as some suppose, the invisible state of the dead. It is used in a figurative sense to denote trouble and sorrow.

35. Ps. 9: 17, is supposed by some to teach the doctrine of endless hell torments; but the reader will bear in mind that the hell, or sheol, there spoken of is either the same as that in which David was while living here in this world, or the same as that into which Jacob expected to go, in which Job prayed to be hid, and in which Korah, Dathan, Abiram and their company, were swallowed up alive. If the latter, then it signifies that the wicked, and those nations that forget God, should be suddenly cut off and destroyed by the judgments of God, — be overwhelmed in calamity, and be brought to an untimely grave.

On the supposition that sheol signifies a place of endless misery, and that the scripture writers understood it so, we see of no way to account for the following additional facts:

1. Not one of the scripture writers has given us an account of the origin, history, or location, of such a place. Moses has given us an account of the creation of the heavens and the earth, but he says not a word about the creation of a place of endless misery. Nor is any such account contained between the lids of the Bible.

Now, if there is such a place God must have created it; and if Moses knew that he had created such a place, why should he overlook so important a fact in his history of the creation?

2. God never informed mankind that he had created such a place. He forewarned Adam and Eve of the consequences of partaking of the forbidden fruit. He forewarned the Jews of the consequences of departing from the law of the Lord; and he has communicated various kinds of information to the children of men. But he has nowhere in the Bible informed any man that he had created an endless hell.

3. It is nowhere said in the Old Testament that sheol is a place of endless misery. We have seen that the word sheol occurs sixty-four times. It was used by Moses, Jacob, Samuel, Ezra, Job, David, and others; but not one of these persons ever intimated that they understood by it a place of endless misery.

4. God never informed the Jewish people that sheol signified a place of endless misery. In addressing that people he frequently uses the word sheol, but always speaks of it as something which existed in this world.

5. Endless punishment in sheol is not annexed as a penalty to any known law of God. God gave to the Jewish people various laws and institutions, and he annexed penalties to those laws; but we shall search in vain to find a law to which is annexed the penalty of endless misery in sheol, or anywhere else.

6. God never threatened the Jewish people with punishment in sheol after death. He frequently threatened them with punishment, and with tremendous and awful judgments; but in no single instance did his threatenings extend beyond death.

7. The Jews were never threatened with punishment in sheol after death by any of their prophets, priests or kings. If the reader thinks we are mistaken, let him examine the Old Testament, and see if he can find an instance of this kind.

8. No person, of whom we have any account in the Old Testament, old or young, rich or poor, bond or free, holy or unholy, ever expressed any fears of suffering misery in sheol after death.

9. No Jew, of whom we have any account in the Bible, ever prayed to be saved from punishment in sheol.

10. It is never said, in the Old Testament, of any person who had died, — whether he died a natural death, or was publicly executed for his crimes, or was cut off by the judgments of God, or whether he was a good or a bad man, — that he had gone to a place of endless misery.

11. When persons died, among the Jews, their surviving relatives and friends never expressed any fears that they had gone to a place of misery. If they knew of any such place, they certainly felt very differently about it from what people do in our day.

12. The Jews never express themselves as if they expected to be separated from their friends after death. Now, if they believed that heaven was a place of endless happiness for some, and sheol a place of endless misery for others, how is this fact to be accounted for? We see no way of accounting for this fact only on the supposition that they had no knowledge of the existence of a place of endless misery.

13. Not one of the Old Testament writers has ever connected the words everlasting, eternal, forever, endless, &c., with sheol. We nowhere read of an everlasting sheol, of an eternal sheol, of an endless sheol, or of a sheol that shall endure forever.

14. Cruden, in his Concordance, admits that sheol "most commonly signifies the grave, or the place or state of the dead." — See Cruden's Concord., art. Hell. And George Campbell, D.D., F.R.S., Edinburgh, and Principal of the Marischal College, Aberdeen, a divine of the Presbyterian church, says that sheol "signifies the state of the dead in general, without regard to the goodness or badness of the persons, their happiness or misery." — See Prel. Dis. 6, p. 2.

HADES. — This word occurs in the New Testament eleven times. It is rendered ten times hell, and once grave. That it does not signify a place of endless misery, is proved by the following facts:

1. In the translation of the Old Testament into Greek, by the Seventy, they rendered the Hebrew sheol by the Greek word hades. Hence, sheol in Hebrew, and hades in Greek, as they occur in the Scriptures, are synonymous terms. And, as our Lord and his disciples always quoted from the version of the Seventy, or Septuagint Version, they would, of course, use words and terms and phrases in accordance with their usage there; and hence sheol in the Old Testament, and hades in the New, signify precisely the same thing

Now, as we have shown that the word sheol does not signify a place of endless misery in the Old Testament, so neither can the word nades signify such a place in the New.

2. The first time hades occurs in the New Testament, it is used in reference to the city of Capernaum; of which city our Lord says, it "shall be brought down to hell." See Matt. 11: 23. And in Luke 10: 15, he says it "shall be thrust down to hell." Now, no one will pretend that the city of Capernaum was to be thrust into a place of endless misery in a future world. The word hades is used here in a figurative sense, to denote desolation and destruction. Adam Clarke says, "The word here means a state of the utmost woe, and ruin, and desolation, to which these impenitent cities should be reduced. This prediction of our Lord was literally fulfilled; for, in the wars between the Romans and the Jews, these cities were totally destroyed; so that no traces are now found of Bethsaida, Chorazin or Capernaum."

3. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke 16: 19—31, this word is used to denote the degradation and misery which came on the Scribes and Pharisees (of whom the rich man is the parabolic representative), when they died to all the privileges of the legal dispensation, were cast out of the gospel kingdom, and were brought into a lower state of degradation than they fancied the publicans and sinners (of whom the beggar is the parabolic representative) to be in. All the figures of this parable are drawn from the heathen notions respecting Elysium and Tartaros. Now, had our Lord believed the views of the heathen in regard to hades and its different apartments to be correct, he would not have drawn the figures of a parable from those views. Indeed, any attempt to do this would be to convert that which was designed for a parable into a literal relation of facts.

4. The soul, or person, of Jesus Christ is spoken of as having been in hell. See Acts 2: 27, 28. Jesus was in hades, — that is, the grave, — to be sure, after death; but does any man believe that he went to a place of endless misery after death?

5. In Rev. 6: 8, hell is spoken of as being in this world. "And I looked, and behold, a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him: and power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth."

6 Mankind are spoken of as being delivered from hell. Rev. 20 . 13, "And death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." Now, if the hell here spoken of was in a future state of existence, one thing is certain, those who were in it were not alive, but dead. How, then, could they suffer misery there? Another thing is very evident: those who were in it were delivered from it, and no intimation is given that they were ever sent back again. If this text has reference to the literal resurrection, then the meaning simply is, that death and the grave, or hades, were to deliver up their dead. But it is not probable that the text refers to a literal resurrection. What John saw, he saw in a vision; and the vision is not to be interpreted literally any more than his other visions recorded in the same book.

7. In Matt. 16: 18, we are told that "the gates of hell (hades) shall not prevail against the church of Christ." But, are we to understand by this that the gates of a place of endless misery should not prevail against his church? What danger was there of this? The word gates here is evidently used to signify power. Death, the common enemy of mankind, was in a thousand forms assailing the subjects of Christ's church, and he himself was to be brought under his dominion, and be made the subject of his pale realm. But a complete victory was to be obtained over death, and mankind were to be delivered from his power. Hence the powers of death and the grave could not prevail against the church of Christ.

8. In Rev. 1: 8, we are informed that Christ has "the keys of hell and of death." But has Christ the keys of a place of endless misery, in a future state of existence, called hell? Is it not supposed, by those who believe in such a place, that an all-powerful evil spirit, called the devil, has possession of those keys? If the keys of hell here mean the keys of a place of endless misery, over which such a being as we have just spoken of reigns, then Jesus must be the door-keeper for the devil. But who can believe this? No one. Jesus has the keys of death and of the grave; he can therefore enter the dominion of these powers, and deliver mankind from their cold and iron grasp.

9. The usage of hades in the New Testament exhibits as plain a resemblance to the grave, as sheol of the Old Testament. In the Old Testament, as we have seen, the gates that guarded the entrance to the burial-places of the Jews, are mentioned in connection with sheol. The same is true of hades in the New Testament. See Matt. 16 : 18. We have seen, too, that the keys, by which these gates were opened, are mentioned in connection with sheol. This is also true of hades. See Rev. 1 : 18. Again, the inmates of sheol are said to be the dead, the slain. So are the inmates of hades. See Rev. 20 : 13. Once more; sheol is used as an emblem of degradation, moral impurity, punishment, etc. So, also, is hades. See Matt. 11 : 23; Luke 10 : 15, and 16 : 23.

If it be asked here "How could the quiet and peaceful grave be made an emblem of misery?" I answer, we have before stated that the grave is a place of physical impurity, corruption and defilement. Hence it is a very appropriate emblem of moral depravity and degradation. And, as misery is the constant and invariable attendant of moral impurity, hence the idea of misery is associated with it. Besides, death precedes, the grave follows in quick succession. The act of dying is generally attended with pain; hence the agonies of dying are associated with the grave. In the common English version of the Scriptures the grave is used as the emblem of cruelty. See Solomon's Song 8 : 6, "Jealousy is cruel as the grave."

10. Hades, like sheol, is destined to be destroyed. 1 Co. 15 : 55, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave (hades), where is thy victory?" If the reader will examine the connection of this text he will see that Paul was treating upon the subject of the literal resurrection of the dead. He shows that all mankind will be raised from the state of death, be changed from "mortal to immortality," from "corruption to incorruption," from "weakness to power," from "natural to spiritual," from "dishonor to glory," and that "death shall be swallowed up in VICTORY." Then he says the triumphant exclamation shall be made, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Paul undoubtedly had his eye on the passage which we have quoted from Hosea 13 : 14, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave (sheol), I will be thy destruction." What is signified by one of these passages is also signified by the other; and hence hades and sheol, in whatever way these terms may be understood, are destined to be destroyed.

11. The last we hear about hades in the New Testament it was "cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20 : 14, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." If the reader will examine the chapter of this book on the lake of fire, he will see that this lake of fire was in this world, and that the phrase "lake of fire" is used in the book of Revelation to signify total and entire destruction. To cast persons into the lake of fire, was to completely destroy them from off the earth. To cast death and hades, the grave or hell, into the lake of fire, was to completely destroy them, so that they would never more exist. For no one pretends that either death or the grave will exist in another world. But this language is highly figurative. Death, and the state of mortality, may be said to have been destroyed when Christ burst the bands of death, rose triumphant from the grave, and brought life and immortality to light. Hence Paul, speaking of Christ, says, "Who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." The believers in this gospel can look forward prospectively to the time when death and the grave shall be destroyed, and be no more forever.

12. Dr. Doddridge, on Rev. 1 : 18, and Parkhurst, who quotes from Lord King's History of the Creed, chapter 4, says: "Hadees, or Haidees (as it is spelt in Homer or Hesiod), obscure, dark, invisible, — from a, negation, and idein, to see. The invisible receptacle or mansion of the dead in general. Our English, or rather our Saxon, word hell, in its original signification (though it is now understood in a more limited sense), exactly answers to the Greek word hades, and denotes a concealed or unseen place; and this sense of the word is still retained in the eastern, and especially in the western counties of England; to hele over a thing, is to cover it." Dr. Campbell says: "As to the word hades, which occurs in eleven places of the New Testament, and is rendered hell in all except one, where it is translated grave, it is quite common in classical authors, and frequently used by the Seventy, in the translation of the Old Testament. In my judgment, it ought never, in Scripture, to be rendered hell, at least in the sense wherein that word is universally understood by Christians. The word hell, in its primitive signification, denoted only what was secret or concealed." — Prelim. Dis. 6, part 2. Dr. Hammond says: "Among profane writers, it is clear that the word (hades) signifies not the place of the damned, no, nor any kind of place, either common to both or proper to either bliss or woe, but only the state of the dead." — Annot. in loc.

Donnegan defines this word thus: "Invisible; not manifest, concealed; dark, uncertain." — Donnegan's Lexicon, p. 19. Dr

Adam Clarke says: "The word hell, used in the common translation, conveys now an improper meaning of the original word; because hell is only used to signify the place of the damned. But, as the word hell comes from the Anglo-Saxon helan, to cover, or hide, hence the tiling or slating of a house is called, in some parts of England (particularly Cornwall), heling, to this day; and the covers of books (in Lancashire), by the same name, so the literal import of the original word hades was formerly well expressed by it." — Com. in loc. Concessions such as these, from such men, ought to satisfy every candid man that the words sheol and hades have been very generally and very greatly misunderstood. At the close of our remarks on Gehenna the reader will find some additional facts on this subject.

TARTAROS. — "This word means that prison of the heathen, hades, in which they supposed that tyrants and other wicked beings were tormented in various modes. The word does not occur in the Bible. But in 2 Peter 2: 4, a verb, derived from this word, is used, — tartaroosas, — and is rendered 'cast down to hell,' — more literally, tartarused them. It is evidently a figure, used to denote severe punishment, imprisonment in a dark place." Tartaros was one of the departments of hades; and as we have shown that hades itself is to be destroyed, of course tartaros must cease to exist also. Hence it cannot be a place of endless misery. For an explanation of 2 Peter 2: 4, see our remarks on Jude 1: 6. It is there shown that the angels who are said to have been tartarused were human messengers, and that the punishment which was inflicted on them was of a temporal nature. As the word tartaroosas occurs but once in the Bible, no further remarks on it are necessary. For if sheol, hades nor Gehenna, either of them, signify a place of endless misery, of course it will not be pretended that tartaroosas signifies such a place.

GEHENNA. — Professor Stuart, of Andover College, says of this word: "The word Gehenna is derived, as all agree, from the Hebrew words Gee Hennom." To this, and in the opinion that this word signifies the valley of Hinnom, — a place, near Jerusalem, where a continual fire was kept burning, to destroy the filth and dirt of that city, — the following writers are all agreed: Adam Clarke, Parkhurst, Wynne, Wakefield, Macknight, Heylin, Rosenmuller, and others. Indeed, this fact is not disputed by a single respectable biblical critic. Its meaning, in the New Testament, must, therefore, be determined by its signification in the Old. In order that the reader may see the scripture usage of it in the Old Testament, we will give every passage from that book where it occurs.

Josh 15 : 8. And the border went up by the valley of the son of Hinnom unto the south side of the Jebusite ; the same is Jerusalem : and the border went up to the top of the mountain that lieth before the valley of Hinnom westward.

2 Kings 23 : 10. And he (Josiah) defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or daughter to pass through the fire to Moloch.

2 Chron. 28 : 3. Moreover, he (Ahaz) burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen.

Jer. 7 : 31, 32. And they (the children of Judah) have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire ; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter : for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place.

Jer. 19 : 2. And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee.

Verse 6. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter.

From the above passages the following facts are perfectly obvious ; 1. The valley of Hinnom was one of the landmarks, or boundaries, of the inheritance of the tribe of Judah. 2. If the reader will consult Lev. 18 : 21, and 20 : 2, he will learn that the idol god Moloch was set up in this valley, and that the Jews sacrificed their sons and their daughters to him. Professor Stuart says : "If we may credit the Rabbins, the head of the idol was like that of an ox, while the rest of its body resembled that of a man. It was hollow within ; and, being heated by fire, children were laid in its arms, and were there literally roasted alive." We cannot wonder, then, at the severe terms in which the worship of Moloch is everywhere denounced in the Scriptures. 3. This valley was called Tophet, as Stuart says, "from Toph, to vomit with loathing ;" or, as Schleusner says, "from Toph, a drum ; because the administrators of these horrible rites beat drums, lest the cries and shrieks of the infants who were burned should be heard by the assembly;" or, as Adam Clarke says, "from tophet, the fire-stove, in which some suppose they burnt their children alive to the idol Moloch." 4. The good king Josiah abolished these nefarious practices, and polluted the place where they had been committed. Schleusner says: "After this, they (the Jews) held the place in such abomination, it is said, that they cast into it all kinds of filth, together with the carcasses of beasts, and the unburied bodies of criminals who had been executed. Continual fires were necessary, in order to consume these, lest the putrefaction should infect the air; and there were always worms feeding on the remaining relics." Stuart says, Josiah polluted this by causing the filth of the city of Jerusalem to be carried there; and, he adds, "It would seem that the custom of desecrating this place, thus happily begun, was continued in after ages, down to the period when our Saviour was on earth. Perpetual fires were kept up, in order to consume the offal which was deposited there. And as the same offal would breed worms (for so all putrefying meat of course does), hence came the expression, Where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched." 5. This valley is made an emblem of that terrible temporal calamity which came on the Jewish nation in the destruction of their city and temple.

This valley lay south of Jerusalem, or on the south and west of Mount Sion, and was very deep, so that the city was inaccessible in that part. Sometimes it was made the place of execution, and the manner of executing criminals there was this: After the malefactor was condemned by the Sanhedrim (a Jewish council, composed of seventy-two persons, six from each of the twelve tribes of the Jews), they set him in a dung-hill up to his knees, and put a towel about his neck, and one pulled one way, and another the opposite, till they forced him to open his mouth. They then poured boiling lead into his mouth, which went down into his belly, and so burnt his bowels. After destroying the life of the unfortunate being in this manner, they then cast his body into the fire, which burned without cessation in that horrid place of defilement and death. Sometimes the criminal was cast alive into this fire, and his life and body destroyed in this manner.

We have seen that this place was made an emblem of the judgment, which came on the Jewish nation in the destruction of their city and temple. Now, let it be borne in mind that Jesus and his apostles addressed the people in the language of the Old Testament scriptures; and it is not to be supposed that they would use words and phrases in any different sense from what they are used in the Old Testament without giving some plain intimation of it. To have done so would have been to purposely deceive the people. The question, then, is not in what sense is the word (Gehenna) used by the Rabbinical writers, or in the Jewish Targums, but what is it used to signify in the Old Testament scriptures? And its meaning there must determine its meaning in the New Testament.

The word Gehenna is used in the New Testament twelve times, and is invariably rendered hell. The following facts, stated in the language of Mr. Balfour, show that it is not used to signify a place of endless misery:

1. "The term Gehenna is not found in the Greek translation of the Old Testament, — called the Septuagint, — or the translation of the Seventy, nor in the Apocrypha, nor in any classic Greek author. It is, therefore, primarily and exclusively, a Jewish or Hebrew term.

2. "The translators had no authority for translating this term by the word hell, as it is the name of a place, — as much so as Sodom and Gomorrah, and, therefore, the original word should have been retained. And I would here remark, that in some excellent versions the original word is left untranslated. It is so in the French Bible, and in the Improved Version, Wakefield's Version, and Newcomb's Translation. The Hebrew words for the valley of Hinnom are Ge-hinnom, and the Greek word Gehenna is a compound of these two words united in one, without a change of meaning. The English words to signify this place are valley of Hinnom. Now, if this term had been left untranslated in those passages where it occurs, or if it had been translated valley of Hinnom, as it ought to have been, there would have been no difficulty in understanding their true meaning. Their meaning would have been obvious to every observing mind.

3. "The word Gehenna is used but twelve times in the New Testament; and, properly speaking, it does not occur even as many times as this. It occurs eleven times in the gospels written by Matthew, Mark, and Luke; and, by comparing the places, it is evident that these historians relate the same discourses in which our Lord used this word." So that, in point of fact, the word was used but eight times; — seven times by our Lord, and once by James. "I mention this fact, because this is the only word which the learned pretend signifies a place of endless misery. And, admitting that this is the proper signification of the term, it is certain it is not mentioned so often in the whole Bible as some of our modern divines mention it in a single sermon.

4. "This word is used by our Lord, and by the apostle James, and by no other person in the New Testament." Neither Paul, John, Peter nor Jude, have used this word in all their writings. "How can this fact be accounted for, if they understood our Lord to mean by it a place of endless misery?

5. "All that is said about Gehenna was spoken to the Jews. It is not once named to the Gentiles in all the New Testament; nor are any of them ever threatened with such a punishment. This fact is indisputable. Now, how can this fact be accounted for, except on the supposition that the punishment of Gehenna was that which alone concerned the Jews? And, as the punishment of Gehenna did not concern the Gentiles, hence nothing is said to them about it."

6. We have seen that our Lord used this word seven times. Five times out of this number he used it when addressing his own immediate disciples. Now, if he used it to signify a place of endless misery, how is it to be accounted for that he should say so much about it to his own disciples, and so little to the unbelieving part of the world?

7. Our Lord used this word but twice, when addressing the unbelieving part of the Jewish nation; and in one of those instances, at least, the connection shows conclusively that no reference was had to punishment in another world. Matt. 23: 33, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell (Gehenna)?" To learn what this "damnation of Gehenna" was, see the next words: "Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city: that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation.' It is plain from this that the damnation of Gehenna was something which they were not going to, but something which was coming to them. Who can doubt that it was the same punishment which was predicted by Jeremiah, in the seventh and nineteenth chapters of his book?

8. "It is admitted on all hands that this word is never used to signify a place of misery in a future world in all the Old Testament."

9. It is also admitted that it is used in the Old Testament to signify punishment in this world; yea, that it is used to signify that very punishment which came on the Jewish people within forty-five years after Christ threatened them with the damnation of Gehenna; and which consisted in the destruction of their city and temple, the destruction of millions of their lives, and the dispersion of the rest throughout the inhabited globe. This fact is made perfectly plain by those passages where the word occurs. See Jer. 7: 30—34. "For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it. And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place. And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away. Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; for the land shall be desolate." See, also, chapter 8: 1—3, "At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves: and they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped; they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth. And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts." See, also, Jeremiah, chapter 19. "Thus saith the Lord, Go, and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests, and go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee; and say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled the place with the blood of innocents; they have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind; therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their carcasses will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. And I will cause them to eat of the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one of the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straitness wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them. Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, and shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again; and they shall bury them in TOPHET, till there be no place else to bury. Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make their city as TOPHET: And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled as the place of TOPHET, because of all the houses upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the hosts of heaven, and have poured out drink offerings unto other gods. Then came Jeremiah from TOPHET, whither the Lord had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the Lord's house, and said to all the people, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it; because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words." The prophet Isaiah has reference to the same thing in chapter 66 : 24, "And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh."

Here we see the origin of the expression "undying worm." It was derived from the fact that worms were constantly preying upon the filth and putrefying flesh which were deposited in Gehenna. Here, also, we see the origin of the expression "unquenchable fire." It was derived from the fact that a fire was kept constantly burning in Gehenna, for purposes which have already been stated. We see, too, that fire and worms are spoken of, in the Old Testament, in connection with the valley of the son of Hinnom. This accounts for the fact that, in the New Testament, the same things are spoken of in connection with Gehenna. And hence the judgment which came upon the Jewish people is called the "damnation," or punishment, "of Gehenna," "Gehenna fire," or the fire of Gehenna. Hence, Gehenna is also spoken of as the place "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Rev. Mr. Parkhurst, in his Lexicon, referring to Matt. 5 : 21, 22, says : "The phrase here translated hell-fire (literally Gehenna of fire), does, I apprehend, in the outward and primary sense, relate to that dreadful doom of being burnt alive in the valley of Hinnom."

No one can doubt that the predictions of Jeremiah and Isaiah, just quoted, were fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem. Then the valley of Hinnom became the valley of slaughter. Then Jerusalem became as Tophet. Then the Jews did eat the flesh of their sons and of their daughters. Then the land of Judea was made desolate. Then the carcasses of the Jewish people became meat for the fowls of heaven, and the beasts of the field; for six hundred thousand of their dead bodies were carried into the valley of Hinnom, and were suffered to lie there unburied. Then the wrath of God came on the Jewish people to the uttermost, and they experienced "tribulation, such as was not from the beginning of the world, even to that same time, no, nor ever shall be." See Matt. 24 : 21.

Now, the fact which we have just stated, — that Gehenna is used in the Old Testament to represent punishment in this world, and nowhere else, — being a fact which is indisputable, we demand, in the language of Mr. Balfour, "What meaning would the Jews, who were familiar with this word, and knew it to signify the valley of Hinnom, be likely to attach to it when they heard it used by our Lord? Would they, contrary to all former usage, transfer its meaning from a place with whose locality and history they had been familiar from their infancy, to a place of misery in another world? This conclusion is certainly inadmissible. By what rule of interpretation, then, can we arrive at the conclusion that this word means a place of misery after death?"

10. If Gehenna signifies a place of endless misery in another world, and if, in those passages where it occurs, it is set in contrast with heaven (as is supposed by those who attach this meaning to the word), it is certain that those who go there are to go bodily. See Matt. 5 : 29. And it is equally certain that those who go to heaven are to go there bodily; and not only so, but are to go there "halt," and "maimed;" — some with only one eye, some with only one hand, and some with only one foot. See Mark 9 : 43, 45, 47. But can any man believe all this?

11. Gehenna, in the New Testament, is set in contrast with the kingdom of God. Mark 9 : 47, "It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than, having two eyes, to be cast into hell (Gehenna) fire." Now, if the reader will examine Chapter XV. of this book, on the phrases kingdom of God, kingdom of heaven, he will see that the phrase kingdom of God signifies the gospel dispensation; and that this kingdom was to be established here on earth, at the time of Christ's coming to destroy Jerusalem, and scatter the power of the holy people. Hence the fact that Gehenna is contrasted with this phrase, proves that Christ used this word to signify the punishment which came on the Jews, and in which the disciples of Christ might be involved if they suffered anything whatever to draw them from their attachment to their Master.

12. If Gehenna signifies a place of punishment in another world, and if God inflicts Gehenna punishment on any of his creatures in that world, it is certain this punishment will consist in entire destruction, and absolute annihilation, and not in endless misery. See Matt. 10 : 28, "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell (Gehenna)." Now, to "destroy the soul, intimates as certainly the death of the soul, as to destroy the body intimates the extinction of the life of the body. If, then, by the word soul we understand the spirit, or immortal part, of man, and if God will do what he is here said to be able to do, — that is, destroy both soul and body, — the doctrine of annihilation is clearly established." And the doctrine of endless misery is overthrown by the very passage which is frequently introduced to prove it. But if we understand Gehenna here to signify the valley of Hinnom, and the word soul to signify the animal life of man (as is its meaning generally in the Bible), then all is plain. God might destroy the lives and bodies of the disciples in that awful calamity which came on the Jewish nation, and which is represented under the figure of Gehenna, or he might cast them into Gehenna by numbering them with the six hundred thousand unbelieving Jews, whose dead bodies were carried into the valley of Hinnom, and left there unburied.

14. If Gehenna means future punishment in the New Testament, it is certain the apostles never preached it to Jews or Gentiles. They did not mention the word in a single instance in all their preaching, of which we have any account. How can this be accounted for, if they understood by it a place of endless misery?

15. If Gehenna means a place of misery, in a future world called hell, it is certain this hell is a material hell; and that punishment in hell consists of torment in literal fire. We know that a material hell has been contended for; but, in these days of refinement, improvement, and light, and knowledge, this idea is pretty generally abandoned. But if any class of people must have a hell, we insist upon it that they abide by the conclusions which are to be legitimately drawn from their premises. If they will have it that

Gehenna means a place of punishment in a future world, then let them be contented with the hell of the Bible, and not undertake to manufacture a new one, nor to improve on the old one. Let them, then, cease to preach about a "spiritual hell," and a "hell of conscience;" and let them go to preaching up the good old Orthodox hell of our fathers. If they will do this, we will at least give them the credit of consistency.

To the views which we have advanced on the meaning of Gehenna, we know of but one plausible objection. That objection we will now state, and reply to.

It is objected, that, "although Gehenna originally denoted the valley of Hinnom, yet it had lost that signification in our Saviour's time, and was used to signify a place of torment in another world." To this objection we reply as follows:

1. This is a barefaced assertion, unsupported by any positive or direct proof whatever.

2. The translation of the Hebrew Scriptures was commenced about two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty years before Christ, when the five books of Moses were translated. The translation of the rest of the books was not undertaken until within one hundred and seventy years of Christ's birth, and was not finished till some time after it was commenced, say twenty years. — See Prideaux's Connections, vol. 3, pp. 356, 357; Horne's Introduction, vol. 2, pp. 168, 169. Now, as when this translation was made, no such change as is alleged had taken place in the meaning of Gehenna; hence, one hundred and fifty years before the date of the New Testament this word retained its original meaning. The only Jewish books which were written between the completion of the Septuagint Version and the public ministry of Christ, which have come down to us, are some of the later books of the Apocrypha, and the writings of Philo. Two of the Apocryphal books allude to punishment after death, but do not speak of it as punishment in Gehenna. Indeed, the word does not occur in any of the Apocryphal books, nor in any of the writings of Philo. How, then, can it be proved that any such change as is supposed had taken place in the meaning of Gehenna?

3. Josephus wrote his works shortly after the New Testament was written. He was a believer in punishment after death, and frequently alludes to it in his writings; yet he never calls it punishment in Gehenna, nor does the word Gehenna occur in his writings. No Jewish writings composed within one hundred years after the time of Josephus have descended to us; so that it cannot be proved that any change in the meaning of Gehenna had taken place within one hundred years after the time of Christ.

4. The first time that Gehenna was used to signify a place of misery after death, of which we have any account, was by Justin Martyr, about the year of our Lord 150.

5. The first time this word is used to signify a place of misery in another world, by any Jewish writer of whom we have any account, was by Jonathan Ben Uzziel, in a Targum written by him, the date of which is uncertain. "Prideaux, together with several of the old critics, and even Gesenius, place it not far from the Christian era, on the authority, chiefly, of Jewish traditions. Prideaux, however, has well observed, that, 'in historical matters, it is not to be regarded what the Jews write, or what they omit.' Most of the eminent critics now agree that it could not have been completed till some time between two hundred and four hundred years after Christ. Dr. Jahn thinks it 'a collection of the interpretations of several learned men, made towards the end of the third century, and containing some of a much older date.' Eichhorn says that 'Jonathan certainly lived later than the birth of Christ;' and, judging from his style, his fables, his perversions of the prophecies concerning the Messiah, and from the profound silence of the early Jews and Christian Fathers, he concludes that his compilation cannot have been made before the fourth century. The same circumstances that Eichhorn adduces, are thought by Bertholdt to indicate the second or third century; and he is confident that the collection 'cannot have attained its complete form before the end of the second century.' With these general conclusions it is said that Bauer likewise agrees; and some critics have referred the work to as late a period as the seventh and eighth centuries." See Universalist Expositor, vol. 2, p. 368. There is no proof, then, that the meaning of the word Gehenna was changed until one hundred and fifty years after Christ. If, therefore, we believe this word signifies a place of misery after death, we must believe it on the authority of uninspired men, — on the authority of Jewish Targums and Talmuds, and not on the authority of the Bible. If the reader is disposed to bow to such authority, he can do so; but we beg to be excused.

The following facts bear equally against understanding either Sheol, Hades, Tartaros, or Gehenna, to signify a place of endless misery.

1. The words eternal, everlasting, forever, &c., are not connected with either Sheol, Hades, Tartaros, or Gehenna, in a single instance in the whole Bible.

2. Paul says he "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God;" and yet he has not, in all his writings, mentioned either Tartaros or Gehenna. He mentioned hades but once, and then used it to signify the grave. Now, if Paul believed these words signified a place of endless misery, how is this fact to be accounted for?

3. Among all the charges brought against Jesus and his apostles by the unbelieving Jews, they never charged them with threatening them with endless misery in Sheol, Hades, Tartaros, Gehenna, or anywhere else. Now, the Jews believed themselves to be the peculiar people of God; and if Jesus or his apostles had threatened them with endless misery, it would have excited their indignation to the highest pitch; and we should have heard them accusing Christ of being audacious and presumptuous. But no; no such charge is brought against him.

4. No person mentioned in the New Testament ever expressed any fears of going to a place of endless misery after death, or ever prayed to God to be saved from such a place. Nor is it said of any person who had died, that he had gone to a place of endless misery, — either in Sheol, Hades, Tartaros, Gehenna, or anywhere else.

5. The salvation of the gospel is never spoken of as a salvation from a place of endless misery, either in Sheol, Hades, Tartaros, or Gehenna. It is spoken of as a salvation from sin, from the darkness of this world, from wrath, from unbelief, and from the power of darkness; but no intimation is given that Jesus came into this world to save mankind from endless misery in another.

Thus, we have finished our examination of these words. The reader can judge for himself whether either of them, as used in the Scriptures can possibly signify a place of endless misery.

SECTION VI.

Statement of FACTS showing that the terms SHAITAN, DEVILS, SATAN, and DIABOLOS, were not used by the Scripture writers to signify a fallen angel, or a personal being called the devil.

SHAITAN. — This is the word which is rendered Satan in the Old Testament. It occurs just thirty-three times. Once in Genesis, twice in Numbers, once in 1 Samuel, once in 2 Samuel, four times in 1 Kings, once in Chronicles, once in Ezra, fourteen times in Job, five times in Psalms, and three times in Zechariah. It is used twenty-seven times in the singular, and six times in the plural number. It is rendered Sitnah once, six times adversary, six times adversaries, once withstand thee. and once accusation.

It is applied as follows : To a well, to an angel of the Lord, to David, to the sons of Zeruiah, to the enemies of Solomon, or Israel, to Hadad the Edomite, to Rezon the son of Eliadah, to the person or persons who counselled David to number the children of Israel, or to the evil passion or desire of David's own mind, which instigated him to do this, to a piece of writing, to the enemies of David, and to the adversary or enemy of Joshua.

The first time it is applied to any being, is in Num. 22: 22, where it is applied to an angel of God, who was of course a good being, and not a fallen angel, or DEVIL, in the common acceptation of that term.

The first time it is applied to a human being, is in 1 Sam. 29: 4, where it is applied to David, who is not supposed to have been a bad man, but, on the contrary, "a man after God's own heart."

The first time the word occurs in the Old Testament, is in Gen. 26: 21, where it is applied to a well; and hatred is put in the margin, as an explanation of it.

By consulting Chapter II., Sect. 1, of this book, to ascertain the scripture usage of this word, the reader will discover that it signifies an enemy, an opposer, an adversary, and that it is not once used to signify a personal being, called the devil, or Satan, i. e., such a being as is commonly believed in by most Christians.

That the word was not used by the Old Testament writers to signify such a being, is further evident from the following additional facts:

1. Not one of these writers has asserted the existence of such a being; or given us any account of his origin, history, locality, &c. Moses has given us the oldest authentic record extant, but he gives us not a word of information concerning a holy, happy angel in heaven, rebelling against God, falling from paradise, and of his introduction into our world. The word Satan, nor devil, occurs in a single instance in his writings. The original word rendered Satan occurs but three times in his five books; and once, as we have seen, he applies it to a well, and twice to an angel of the Lord. That Moses did not design to teach the existence of such a being is, therefore, indisputable. The five books of Moses comprise a history of the world for a period of more than two thousand years. During this whole time, then, mankind were entirely ignorant of the existence of an all-powerful evil spirit, called the devil.

2. The word rendered Satan, in the Old Testament, does not occur in any of the following books: Exodus, Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 2 Kings, 2 Chronicles, Nehemiah, Esther, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Malachi. Of course, it will not be pretended that either of these books teaches the existence of such a being; and whether such a thing is taught in those books where the word does occur, let the reader determine by examining all the passages where it is found. Can it be supposed that the Jews of ancient times were knowing to the existence of a devil, who was doing extensive mischief in the world, enticing men to sin, and leading millions down to irretrievable ruin and misery; and yet, that such holy men as Joshua, Nehemiah, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, &c., should say not one word concerning him?

3. God never gave the Jewish people, through the medium of his prophets, any warning concerning the devil, any information in regard to the extensive and powerful evil influence which he was constantly exercising over them. Nor are any directions given how his influence might be resisted, and his power counteracted. All of which was certainly very necessary, if such a being really existed.

4. No person, of whom we have any account in the Old Testament, ever undertook to excuse himself for his crimes and iniquities, by saying he was enticed, or tempted, by the devil, and charging the blame upon him. The case of Eve may be thought an instance of this; but I remark, that we are not told that the serpent was a fallen angel, nor that the devil assumed the form of a serpent, and tempted Eve. Besides, Adam acknowledged no influence of the serpent or the devil in his case, but charges the blame upon his wife. We might as well, therefore, suppose Eve to be the devil, or the woman to be the form which the devil assumed, as to suppose this of the serpent.

5. The children of the Jews were not taught by their parents anything concerning the devil; nor were they cautioned to beware of his seductive wiles and stratagems; nor told that for disobedience they would be consigned over to his tender mercies. All this is perfectly unaccountable, if Jewish parents believed as some parents do now.

6. Among all the prayers recorded in the Old Testament, there is not a single instance of any individual ever praying, either for himself, or any one else, to be delivered from the influence or power of the devil in this world, or anywhere else. Either persons then did not believe as many do now, or they were culpably negligent in this respect.

7. We are not informed, in the Old Testament, of any person who ever swore by the devil, or cursed by the devil, or ever wished any of their fellow-men to go to the devil. Certainly, wicked, profane Jews did not believe as profane men do now, or we should have some instances of this kind.

8. Another fact is, that no person under the Old Testament dispensation, either good, bad, or indifferent, ever expressed any fears of going to the devil himself, or of any other persons going to the devil. They express no such fears when well, when sick, nor on the bed of death. Nor do the living express any fears that their deceased relatives, friends, or acquaintances, had gone to the devil.

DEVILS. — This word is found in the Old Testament four times. It occurs once in Leviticus, once in Deuteronomy, once in 2 Chronicles, and once in Psalms. By consulting Section 2 of this Chapter, which contains all the passages where it occurs, every person can see that it is used to signify the heathen divinities, or false gods of the heathen; and in no other sense. As it is not pretended that this word is used to signify a fallen angel, no more need be said on it.

SATAN. — This word occurs both in the Old and in the New Testament. In the Old it occurs just eighteen times. Once in 1 Chronicles, fourteen times in the book of Job, and three times in Zechariah. In the Old Testament we have seen it signifies an enemy, an opposer, an adversary. It is used in precisely the same sense in the New. This word occurs in the New Testament thirty-seven times. Four times in Matthew, six times in Mark, six times in Luke, once in John, twice in Acts, once in Romans, twice in 1 Corinthians, three times in 2 Corinthians, once in 1 Thessalonians, once in 2 Thessalonians, twice in 1 Timothy, and eight times in Revelation. It is not found in Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Hebrews, James, 1 and 2 Peter, 1, 2, and 3 John, nor in Jude.

This word is applied in the New Testament as follows: To Peter, one of the disciples of Christ; to Beelzebub, the imaginary prince, or god, of the demons or spirits of dead men; to Judas, another disciple of Christ, who deserted him, and thereby became an enemy or adversary to him; to the unbelieving Jews, who were the adversaries of Christ, and of his religion; to false teachers, they being the enemies of truth; and to the heathen opponents of the Gospel, and persecutors of the followers of Christ; see Rev. 2 : 13. It is also applied to the spirit of wickedness in man, and to the evil passions and desires of men; see Acts 5 : 3, and John 13 : 27.

DIABOLOS. — This word is found in the Greek Testament thirty-six times. Six times in Matthew, six times in Luke, three times in John, twice in Acts, twice in Ephesians, three times in 1 Timothy, twice in 2 Timothy, once in Titus, once in Hebrews, once in James, once in 1 Peter, three times in 1 John, once in Jude, and six times in the book of Revelation. It is not found in Mark, John, Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, Philemon, 2 Peter, nor in 2 and 3 John.

If the reader will examine Section 4 of this Chapter, he will see that the words devil and Satan are used in the New Testament as synonymous terms.

The word diabolos is translated in the common version of the New Testament thirty-three times devil, twice false accusers, and once slanderers. Had it been invariably rendered by words which properly define it, no one would ever have dreamed that it was used to signify a fallen angel. Donnegan defines this word thus: Diabolos — an accuser, a calumniator. See Donnegan's Greek and English Lexicon, p. 356. We are aware that some writers say it signifies the devil; meaning a fallen angel, such as has been generally believed in; but before it can be allowed to have this signification, it must be proved that such a being exists; or, at least, that the New Testament writers believed in the existence of such a being, and applied this word to him; which we think cannot be done. This word is applied in the New Testament in the same manner that Satan is, and signifies precisely the same thing. If the reader, therefore, will examine all the texts where it occurs, and read them as if it was rendered slanderer, accuser, calumniator, opposer, enemy or adversary, he cannot fail of understanding them in their true sense.

In closing this chapter, we will state some objections to the common view of the subject, and reply to some objections against the views which we have presented.

1. The common view of the subject is absurd. It supposes sin to have originated in heaven. Now heaven is everywhere represented in the Scriptures as a holy, happy place, into which nothing sinful, unholy, or unclean can ever enter. To suppose, therefore, that sin and rebellion against God originated there, is absurd in the extreme.

2. It is contrary to experience. It supposes man to be influenced to sin by a personal devil. Now no rational man, acquainted with human nature, ever felt, or imagined that he felt, any such influence.

3. It is unphilosophical. It supposes more causes than are necessary, to account for the wickedness of man. We think the fact of man's animal nature being so closely connected with his spiritual is abundantly sufficient to account for all his sin and wickedness, without resorting to the supposition that a personal devil has any concern in the matter. We have no doubt that thousands have imagined they felt the influence of such a being. So have thousands imagined they felt the influence of witches; and this fact proves as much in one case as in the other.

4. It comes directly in contact with the plain declarations of the Bible.

1st. It supposes sin to have been introduced into our world by a fallen angel. Whereas, the Bible declares that by one man, not by one devil, nor by one fallen angel; but "by one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin." See Rom. 5 : 12.

2d. It supposes man to be tempted by a personal devil. But when the Bible speaks out plainly on this subject, it declares that every man, yes, every man from Adam down to latest posterity; every man is tempted, not by the devil, not by a fallen angel, but "every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." See James 1 : 14, and 4 : 1—4, and Prov. 1 : 10.

3d. This theory supposes that the works of the devil will remain, and that he himself will exist throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. But the Bible affirms that he himself, and all his works, shall be destroyed. Heb. 2 : 14; 1 John 3 : 8. Whatever this devil may be supposed to be, then, one thing is certain; he is destined to be completely destroyed, together with all his works. So far, therefore, as the salvation of the human race is concerned, it is a matter of no consequence whether such a being as a personal devil has any real existence or not.

We will now notice some objections to our views. It is objected,

1. That personal pronouns are applied to the devil in the Bible, and the Scriptures frequently speak of him as a real being; and represent him as talking, acting, &c.

To this we reply, that personal pronouns are applied to many inanimate things in the Bible; and oftentimes they are represented as talking, acting, &c. The earth is personified. Job 31: 38. The heavens are personified. Jer. 2: 12, 13. The sea. Job 38: 8, 9. Destruction. Job 28: 22. Death and the grave. 1 Cor. 15: 55; Job 28: 22. The hosts of heaven. Ps. 148: 1—5. The mountains and hills. Isa. 55: 12. The trees of the forest. Judges 9: 7—16. Wisdom also is personified. Proverbs, chapters 8 and 9; also, Prov. 1: 20—33. Seeing so many things are personified in the Scriptures, is it any marvel that evil, that wicked men, that the lusts and passions of men, should be personified? So far from it, it is just what we should be led to expect.

2. It is said, If the idea of a personal devil and an endless hell be given up, our preachers will have nothing to preach about. We frankly confess, we know of many preachers who, in such a case, would lose a principal topic of conversation and pulpit declamation. But then it must be confessed that, if in reality no such being as a personal devil exists, the less that is said about him the better. And if these preachers can find no better subjects to discourse upon, they had better abandon the ministry, and be silent.

3. It was remarked by a certain old lady, that the existence of a devil was perfectly clear; else how could mankind make a picture of him? We know there have been a great many pictures of the devil, and we also know that a great many pictures of things exist in the human imagination, and are even put upon paper, which have no existence in reality. Mankind are extremely fond of pictures; and perhaps some will esteem it a hard case that we should attempt to rob them of their beautiful pictures of the devil.

In conclusion we remark, that until the facts and objections stated in this section, against the existence of a personal devil, are satisfactorily accounted for or removed, we must continue to believe that such a being exists only in the imaginations of the ignorant, the weak, and the credulous; and that the idea of his existence ought to be abandoned by every rational man.

Luke 4 : 40, 41. Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him ; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them. And devils (demons) also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ, the Son of God. And he, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak : for they knew that he was Christ

Mark 16 : 17. And these signs shall follow them that believe : in my name shall they cast out devils (demons) : they shall speak with new tongues.

Luke 9 : 1. Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils (demons), and to cure diseases.

Luke 10 : 17. And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils (demons) are subject to us through thy name.

Mark 9 : 38. Master, we saw one casting out devils (demons) in thy name.

Luke 9 : 49, 50. And John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils (demons) in thy name, and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not : for he that is not against us is for us.

And when the devil (demon) was cast out, the dumb spake ; and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel. But the Pharisees said, He casteth out devils (demons) through the prince of the devils (demons).

Luke 11 : 14—26. And he was casting out a devil (demon), and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil (demon) was gone out, the dumb spake ; and the people wondered. But some of them said, He casteth out devils (demons) through Beelzebub the chief of the devils (demons). And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven. But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation ; and a house divided against itself falleth. If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand ? because ye say that I cast out devils (demons) through Beelzebub. And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils (demons), by whom do your sons cast them out ? therefore shall they be your judges. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils (demons), no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace ; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armor wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. He that is not with me is against me ; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest ; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself ; and they enter in, and dwell there ; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Compare from verse 24 to 26, with Matt. 12 : 43—45.

Matt. 12 : 22—28. Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil (demon) blind and dumb : and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw. And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David? But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils (demons). And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation ; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand : And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself ; how shall then his kingdom stand? And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils (demons), by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges. But if I cast out devils (demons) by the spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

Matt. 17 : 14—18. And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, kneeling down to him, and saying, Lord, have mercy on my son ; for he is a lunatic, and sore vexed : for oft times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water. And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him. Then Jesus answered and said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to me. And Jesus rebuked the devil (demon) ; and he departed out of him : and the child was cured from that very hour. The same account is given in Mark 9 : 14—30, and Luke 9 : 37—43.

Luke 4 : 33—36. And in the synagogue there was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil (demon) ; and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, Let us alone ; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art ; the Holy One of God. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil (demon) had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not. And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out. The same account is given in Mark 1 : 23—29.

Mark 3 : 20—26. And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread. And when his (Christ's) friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him : for they said, He is beside himself. And the Scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils (demons) casteth he out devils (demons) And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan? And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand. And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

Matt. 15 : 21—28. Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David ; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil (demon). But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought him, saying, Send her away ; for she crieth after us. But he answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. And she said, Truth, Lord ; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from the master's table. Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman great is thy faith : be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour. The same account is contained in Mark 7 : 24—31.

Luke 8 : 26—38. And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee. And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils (demons) long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs. When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice, said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, torment me not (For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him : and he was kept bound with chains, and in fetters ; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil (demon) into the wilderness.) And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? and he said, Legion : because many devils (demons) were entered into him. And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep. And there was there a herd of many swine feeding on the mountain ; and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them. Then went the devils (demons) out of the man, and entered into the swine : and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked. When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country. Then they went out to see what was done ; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils (demons) were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind : and they were afraid. They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils (demons) was healed. Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him to depart from them ; for they were taken with great fear. And he went up into the ship, and returned back again. Now the man, out of whom the devils (demons) were departed, besought him that he might be with him. The same account is contained in Matt. 8 : 28—34, and Mark 5 : 1—21.

Mark 1 : 23—27. And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit ; and he cried out, saying, Let us alone ; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.

Mark 3 : 11. And unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

Luke 7 : 21. And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits ; and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

Acts 5 : 16. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits : and they were healed every one.

Acts 8 : 6, 7. And the people (of Samaria) with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them : and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

Acts 16 : 16—18. And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying: the same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation. And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned, and said to the spirit, I command thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

Acts 19: 13—16. Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits, the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth. And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so. And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

James 2: 19. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils (demons) also believe, and tremble.

SECTION III.

Remarks and observations on DEMONS; and facts stated, showing that the demons mentioned in the Bible were not fallen angels.

If the reader will carefully examine every passage in the New Testament wherein allusion is made to demons, he will see that "demons," "unclean spirits," "the spirits," "evil spirits," "unclean spirit," and "spirit of divination," all mean precisely the same thing. The common theory respecting these demons is the following: It is supposed that they were once holy and happy angels of God in heaven. But, in consequence of their having been drawn off from their allegiance to God, and joining the devil in his rebellion against the Most High, they, together with their great chief, or leader, were expelled from heaven, and cast out into the earth; since which time they have been constantly at work contriving how they may torment the human race. To this theory we object as follows:

1. We have shown that the Bible gives no account of any such rebellion in heaven, nor of any such fall of angels; and that it does not teach the real, personal existence of any such being as the devil. If any man believes, therefore, that these demons were fallen angels, he must believe it without the authority of the Bible.

2. A marked distinction is kept up between the devil and demons, throughout the Bible. The Jews are accused of sacrificing unto demons, Deut. 32: 17; Ps. 106: 37; Isa. 65: 11. But they are never accused of sacrificing unto Satan, or Diabolos. Satan and Diabolos are spoken of as one; and these words are never used in the plural number only when speaking of human beings. But the demons are spoken of as many; — seven were cast out of Mary Magdalene; and of one man we read he had a whole legion. Persons are spoken of as being possessed of demons; but nowhere is it intimated in the Bible that any person was ever possessed of Satan or Diabolos. Demons are said to have been cast out of persons; but never is it said that Satan, or Diabolos, was cast out of any man.

3. This theory is contrary to the opinions of both Jews and heathen respecting the origin and nature of these demons. Enfield tells us that the Chaldeans, and, indeed, all the heathen nations, believed in the existence of an innumerable host of demons. He also tells us that the same belief was entertained by all the different schools of heathen philosophers. He likewise informs us that Xenocrates, Plato, Cicero, Pythagoras, and others, taught that demons are of two kinds — superior and inferior; the superior, those that inhabited the sun and stars; the inferior, human souls, separated from the body. Plutarch, Thales and Hesiod, taught the same doctrine. Josephus tells us that demoniacs were possessed by the spirits of dead men. That the belief in the existence of demons was common among the Jews in our Saviour's time, is a fact too notorious to admit of denial. From what source they derived these opinions we shall see presently. It is also an indisputable fact that these demons, so far from being fallen angels, were the spirits, souls or ghosts, of dead men, which were supposed to come back to this world, and take possession of, or enter into, the living.

4. The Bible nowhere informs us that these demons were fallen angels. Demons are spoken of in the Old Testament, and very frequently mentioned in the New; but not a hint is given that they were fallen angels. Now, can it be believed that the scripture writers believed these demons to be fallen angels, and, although they frequently mention them, yet that this opinion of theirs should never leak out?

5. This theory comes in direct contact with the plain teachings of the Bible. See Deut. 32: 17. It is certain, from this text, that these demons were something that the Jews had formerly known nothing about, and that their fathers had no fear of them.

If, then, they were fallen angels, the Jews of ancient times were ignorant of their existence, and had no fears respecting them. In Psalm 96 : 5, we are told that "all the gods of the heathen are idols" (daimonia). The heathen worshipped the deified ghosts of dead men, and their idols were representations of these ghostly gods. But the Bible declares that these gods had no real existence; and the mere representation of them was all that did really exist.

There are now three questions which demand serious consideration. 1. What was the theory adopted by the Jews respecting these demons? 2. From whence did they derive their opinions concerning them? 3. Had their opinions in relation to them any foundation in truth?

1. What were their opinions respecting demons? On the authority of Josephus, we affirm that they believed these demons to be the souls or spirits of dead men. From reading what is said about these demons in the New Testament, it is evident the Jews believed there was a vast number of them. It is also evident they believed these demons sometimes came back to this world, entered into the bodies of the living, and had power to torment them, by inflicting various maladies upon them, such as dumbness, blindness, lunacy, epilepsy, madness, &c. This opinion is alluded to, Matt. 9 : 32—34; Luke 11 : 14—26; Matt. 12 : 22—28, and 17 : 14—18; and Luke 8 : 26—38. Madness was supposed to be occasioned by a demon of the very worst and most malignant kind. The number of demons which a man had was supposed to be in proportion to the strangeness and malignity of the disease with which he was afflicted. They had observed that, when a person was cured of insanity or madness, and afterwards had a relapse, the disease seized hold of him with increased violence. Hence they supposed the old demon had returned, and brought other demons with him; or that a new demon, of more malignant character than the first, had taken possession of him. This opinion is alluded to, Luke 11 : 24—26, and Matt. 12 : 43—45. They believed that all the demons were subordinate to one great chief or leader, and this chief they called Beelzebub. This opinion is alluded to by Mark 3 : 20—26; Matt. 12 : 22—28, and Luke 11 : 14—26. They seem to have thought that these demons were in due time to be sent into some place of punishment, — under the earth, or under the sea.

This we infer from Luke 8 : 31, and Matt. 8 : 29. They believed these demons might be expelled by human agency; and hence they practised exorcism for that purpose. Matt. 12 : 27, and Luke 11 : 19.

2. From whence did they derive these opinions? It could not be from the Bible, for we have seen the Bible teaches no such doctrines. Where, then, could they have learned them? We answer, they learned them from the heathen. We have seen that their fathers knew nothing about the existence of such beings, and had no fear of them. We have also seen that when the Jews first began to worship such beings they worshipped "new gods," which came "newly up," and of which their fathers, although enjoying a revelation from God, had never heard. But when did they learn these opinions? Dr. Knapp, an orthodox German divine, whose work on Theology has been translated at Andover, and highly approved by the professors there, says: "There is no trace of a belief in the existence of evil spirits, even among the Jews, until the Babylonian captivity." And every person at all acquainted with Jewish history knows that, during their seventy years' captivity in Babylon, they learned a vast many heathen notions, and, by incorporating them with their own religion, corrupted the religion of their fathers, and even made void the law of God by their traditions. But where did the heathen learn these opinions? Certainly not from divine revelation, for they enjoyed no such revelation. In fine, we can trace these opinions to no higher or better source than the vain imaginations of the heathen. They originated from the same source as did the heathen opinions concerning the angel of darkness, the angel of light, the god Baal, the god of the grove, the god of the hills, the god of the valley, the god of thunder, the god of storms, the god of peace, the god of war, &c., &c. They owe their origin to the same source as did all the gods of the heathen, of whom there were no less, in the time of Christ, than thirty thousand. If any man thinks he can trace them to a higher or better source than this let him nerve himself to the task. We feel very confident he will fail in the undertaking. Let us now hear what the learned Wakefield says on this subject. He says: "Demoniacs was a popular name for one sort of madness, chiefly of the raging kind, founded on a foolish superstition of the vulgar, that madmen were possessed by the spirits of dead men, called demons, just as others were called lunatics, as if affected by the moon. So modern times have had their St. Vitus' dance, and St. Anthony's fire, and these terms are used without scruple by those who have not the least notion of the interference of these saints in these particular disorders. Indeed, all great irregularities in the system of nature, of which raging madness is one, the ancients, both heathen and Jews, but especially the latter, were accustomed to attribute to supernatural agency. Thus, for instance, an unusual and lucky cast of the dice was called by the Romans 'the cast of Venus,' as if occasioned by that goddess. It is wonderful to me how any man, conversant with classic authors, can entertain any other opinion of the demoniacs of the New Testament. Indeed, it is the most remarkable instance I know of the triumph of prejudice and superstition over learning and good sense. This idea is nothing new. The same opinion was maintained by several great men, both of the last and present century; and, among the rest, by Joseph Mede, of Christ's College, Cambridge, — as learned, and, in every view, as respectable a divine as England ever produced."

Such being the facts in relation to demons and demoniacs, we are led necessarily to adopt the following conclusions, namely:

1. That all that is said in the New Testament concerning demons is spoken in accordance with the generally received opinions of the people of that day, and without any intention to sanction those opinions, or give them the least countenance or support.

2. When persons are spoken of in the New Testament as having been possessed with demons, all that ought to be understood by it is, that the persons were laboring under some kind of disease, either bodily or mental, which was supposed to be occasioned by a demon or demons.

3. When the Jews accuse Christ of having a demon, — John 10 : 20, 21, and 7 : 20, and 8 : 48, 49, 52, — and John the Baptist of having a demon, — Matt. 11 : 18, and Luke 7 : 33, — all that is to be understood by it is, that either they accused them of this out of malice, or else they actually believed them to be deranged, and supposed their derangement to be occasioned by a demon. Indeed, they say of Christ, John 10 : 20, "He hath a demon, and is mad." Now, all will admit that when they supposed John and Christ to have a demon, they were mistaken. Why, then, not admit that they were equally as mistaken in supposing any one to have a demon ?

4. When it is said of Christ, and of his disciples, that they cast demons out of persons, we are to understand by it that they removed the diseases under which the persons were laboring, and which were supposed to be produced by demons. Indeed, it is expressly said of such, that "they were healed." Matt. 4 : 24, and 12 : 22, and 17 : 18, and 15 : 28; Acts 5 : 16.

5. When Christ gave his disciples power to cast out demons, we are to understand that he gave them power to cure or remove those diseases which were supposed to be occasioned by evil spirits called demons.

6. When it is said of Mary Magdalene that seven demons were cast out of her, we are to understand that a disease was removed from her which was supposed to be occasioned by the power of seven demons. And when it is said that a legion of demons were cast out of the Gadarene demoniac, — Luke 8 : 30, 33, — we are to understand that he was cured of a madness of such malignant kind that it was supposed to be produced by the combined influence of a whole legion of demons. That his disease was madness is evident, not only from his conduct, but from the fact that it is expressly said of him, "he was restored to his right mind." Luke 8 : 35, and Mark 5 : 15.

7. When it is said of Christ that he cast a dumb demon out of one man, — Luke 11 : 14, — and a blind and dumb demon out of another, — Matt. 12 : 22, — we are to understand, not that the demons were blind, or dumb, or both, but that the person himself, in the one case, was dumb, and in the other, both blind and dumb. And as Christ restored the speech of one, and both the speech and sight of the other, hence it was supposed by the Jews that he had cast out the demons which were supposed by them to occasion these disorders.

To the views which we have presented on this subject, it will undoubtedly be objected as follows, namely :

1. "Both Christ and his disciples speak of demons as real beings, nor do they give the least intimation that they were not. Now, if they believed that the opinions of the Jews respecting demons were mere superstitious whims, why did they not inform them of this fact ?"

Answer. — We will answer this question by asking another. Christ speaks of mammon as a real being, — Matt. 6 : 24; Luke 16 : 9, — nor does he give any intimation that he did not believe in the existence of such a being. Now, if Christ believed that no such being as mammon existed, why did he not inform the people of that fact? Mammon was one of the heathen gods — the god of riches; and if the silence of Christ respecting his disbelief in the existence of demons proves that such beings do really exist, then his silence respecting his disbelief in mammon proves that such a god as mammon does really exist. Again, Christ and his disciples speak of the devil, of death, and of wisdom, as real beings; but who believes that they intended to countenance the belief of the heathen respecting the existence of an evil god, or of the Jews respecting the existence of an all-powerful evil spirit, called the devil, who was once an angel of God? In Chapter II. of this work we have shown that Christ used the term devil in the same sense that the term Satan is employed in the Old Testament; and that it is not once used to signify a personal being called the devil. Is it to be supposed that, when Christ and his disciples speak of death and wisdom as personal beings, they meant to recognize the real existence of the angel of death, supposed to exist by the Jews? or the goddess of wisdom, supposed to exist by the heathen? Certainly not. No more is it to be supposed that, when they speak of demons, they meant to recognize the real existence of such beings. Once more. The disciples of Christ speak of the doctrine of preëxistence; John 9 : 1—3; of the doctrine of transmigration; Matt. 14 : 1, 2, and 16 : 14; Mark 6 : 15, 16; Luke 9 : 7, 19; nor were either of these doctrines pointedly or particularly condemned by Jesus Christ. But are we to infer from this fact that these doctrines are true? In Gal. 3 : 1, Paul speaks of witchcraft, nor does he say that he did not believe in witchcraft. But are we to infer from this that Paul really believed in the existence of witches? In Acts 16 : 16, we read of a certain damsel who was possessed of a "spirit of divination," or "of Python," as it is in the margin. This damsel was a heathen prophetess, or fortune-teller, and it was supposed by the heathen that she was inspired by the spirit of Apollo Pythias. Paul is said to have cast this spirit out of her; and nothing is said, either by Luke or Paul, respecting the falsity of the heathen notions respecting the source of the inspiration of this damsel, nor even of the inspiration itself. But are we to infer from this that Luke and Paul believed she was really inspired, and that, too, by the spirit of a dead man? Christ and his disciples speak of these, and many other things, in the common language of the age, and they frequently allude to the opinions of the Jews, without telling us how those opinions originated, or whether they believed them true or false. In the language of Mr. Balfour: "To have corrected all the false opinions of the age, would have been an arduous and vain work; and had they not spoken of things in the common language of other people, they could not have been understood; but would have subjected themselves to the charge of vanity and affectation. They did then what we do now — speak in the popular language of the day. We speak now of St. Anthony's fire, St. Vitus' dance, and of the rising and setting of the sun; and people would smile at the man who refused to do so."

2. It is objected that "Jesus spoke of Beelzebub as the prince of demons; Luke 11: 18, 19, and never intimated that no such being existed; but, on the contrary, spoke as if such a being did really exist."

Answer. — When Jesus spoke of Beelzebub, he spoke in answer to a charge brought against himself by the Jews, namely, that he cast out demons by the power of Beelzebub. He spoke in accordance with the generally received opinion, and reasoned with the Jews on their own received principles. He showed the inconsistency of supposing that Beelzebub would lend his aid in overcoming and casting out his own demons. The argument was conclusive; and it appears the Jews deemed it so, for they never undertook to refute it. The Jews evidently believed Beelzebub to be the prince of demons. But what authority had they for thus believing? Certainly not the authority of the Bible; for that contains no such doctrine. On the contrary, it affirms that Baal-zebub was the god of Ekron, 2 Kings 1: 2, 3, 6, 16. After the Jews adopted the heathen fables respecting demons, and the prince which presided over them, it was the easiest thing in the world to apply the terms Beelzebub and Satan to that prince.

3. It is said that "Jesus rebuked these demons; but how could he rebuke a thing which did not exist?"

Answer. — When it is said that Jesus rebuked these demons, we are to understand that he rebuked the disease, which was sup posed to be produced by demons. And that there is nothing inconsistent in this idea, must be admitted, inasmuch as it is expressly said of Peter's wife's mother, who was sick of a fever, that Jesus "rebuked the fever, and it left her." Luke 4: 38, 39.

4. "These demons are represented as talking; but how could they be said to talk, unless they really existed?"

Answer. — When these demons are represented as talking, we are to understand by it, not that the demons spoke, but that the persons themselves, who were supposed to be possessed, uttered the words which are ascribed to the demon. It was supposed, by those who believed in demoniacal possession, that all the actions, words or deeds, of the man thus possessed were produced by an evil spirit, and hence, whatever the demoniac himself said or did was ascribed to the demon. Besides, the language which is ascribed to the demons in Luke 4: 40, 41, is, in Luke 4: 33—36, Luke 8: 26—38, Matt. 8: 28—34, and Mark 5: 1—21, ascribed to the demoniacs themselves.

5. "These demoniacs acknowledged themselves to be possessed with demons; but how is this fact to be accounted for, if, indeed, there was no such thing?"

Answer. — How is it to be accounted for that, during the time of the Salem witchcraft, many persons acknowledged themselves to be bewitched; and even, in some cases, that they were witches, and had power to bewitch others? The fact is, it was a current opinion among the Jews that madness was owing to a possession with an evil spirit; hence the madmen themselves, who once had their senses, must of course have had the same notion. "These madmen, as is not uncommon, knew themselves to be so; and, therefore, thought themselves possessed, and spoke in that character." They not only believed themselves to be possessed, but they thought that the process of expelling the demons from them would be attended with pain. They also believed that these demons were sent to punish them for their sins; and that the demons themselves would some time or other be sent to some place of punishment. Hence, they besought Jesus to "torment them not." Luke 8: 28. This is explained by the next words. "For he (Jesus) had commanded the unclean spirit to come out." The demoniac thought it would be a painful operation to expel the demons, and chose to remain as he was. When it is said the demons "besought Jesus that he would suffer them to enter into the swine," we are to understand that the demoniacs themselves made this request. And this was certainly very characteristic of a person laboring under insanity When it is said the demons "went out of the man, and entered into the swine," we are to understand that Jesus transferred the disease, under which the demoniac was laboring, to the swine. That the swine were made mad, is sufficiently evident from the manner in which they acted.

6. "These demons are represented as having been perfectly acquainted with the character of Jesus; but if it was the demoniacs who are represented thus, how is the fact of their understanding the character of Jesus to be accounted for?"

Answer. — These demoniacs had undoubtedly heard of the fame of Jesus, of his wonderful miracles, and of his power to cure those diseases which were supposed to be produced by demons. Many of them were undoubtedly brought to Jesus by their friends, for the express purpose of having the demons cast out of them. And in all cases when Jesus came where there were any demoniacs, it would be very natural for the people to inform them who he was; and also to tell them of his power to cast out demons. Besides, in many cases, no doubt, these demoniacs had seen Jesus, and understood perfectly well the character which was ascribed to him by his followers. It was, therefore, perfectly natural that they should express themselves precisely in the manner they did, in relation to him. In so doing, they only imitated the example of other diseased persons who were not demoniacs.

In conclusion, we will only remark, that the whole theory of demoniacal agency is contrary to the general teachings of the Bible; inasmuch as that everywhere represents that all of our diseases and afflictions come from God alone. Besides, the very same diseases with which the demoniacs were afflicted prevail at the present day; and no one dreams that they are produced by supernatural agency. On the contrary, they are always ascribed to natural causes.

CHAPTER IV.

BIBLE DOCTRINE OF REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS.

SECTION I.

Promises to the obedient.

And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth : And all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field. Blessed shalt thou be in the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out. The Lord shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face : they shall come out against thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways. The Lord shall command the blessing upon thee in thy store-houses, and in all that thou settest thine hand unto ; and he shall bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. Threatenings to the disobedient.

Deut 28 : 15—26. But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command you this day, that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee: Cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken me. The Lord shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have consumed thee from off the land, whither thou goest to possess it. The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting, and with mildew, and they shall pursue thee until thou perish; and thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed. The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies; thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth. And thy carcass shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall fray them away. See also Deut. 28 : 27—68.

Though he heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay, he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver. He buildeth his house as a moth, and as a booth that the keeper maketh. The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not. Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night. The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth, and, as a storm, hurleth him out of his place. SECTION III.

Instances recorded in the Bible of Divine punishment inflicted on the wicked in this life.

Case of Eve—for partaking of the forbidden fruit. Gen. 3 : 16. And unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception : in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children ; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

Of Adam—for the same crime. Gen. 3 : 17—19. And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it ; cursed is the ground for thy sake ; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life : thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee ; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field : in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground ; for out of it wast thou taken : for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

Of Cain—for the murder of his brother Abel. Gen. 4 : 10—13. And he said, What hast thou done ? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground : and now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand. When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength : a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth. And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment is greater than I can bear.

Of the Antediluvians—for their great wickedness. Gen. 6 : 5. And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth. Verse 7. And the Lord said, I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth ; both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air. Gen. 7 : 21—22. And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowls, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth on the earth, and every man : all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark.

Of Sodom and Gomorrah. Gen. 19: 24, 25. Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven: and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground.

Of Lot's wife. Gen. 19: 26. But his (Lot's) wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt.

Of Pharaoh and the Egyptians—for their cruel oppression of the Israelites. Exodus, chapters 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11. These judgments were nine in number. 1. The river Nile and all the waters of the land were turned into blood. 2. Frogs were sent into their houses, into their bedchambers, into their ovens, and into their kneading-troughs. 3. The dust of the land was turned to lice. 4. The cattle of the Egyptians were afflicted with flies, and a terrible murrain, insomuch that they died, and the Egyptians themselves with boils breaking forth with blains very grievous. 5. A grievous hail mingled with fire came upon them. 6. The whole land was filled with destroying beasts. 7. A dreadful darkness, "which might be felt," came upon them. 8. The first-born of them were slain by the destroying angel. 9. Pharaoh and his host were overwhelmed in the waters of the red sea, and cut off from the earth. See Ex. 14.

Of Abimelech—for the murder of the sons of Jerubbaal. Jud. 9: at verse 56 we are told:—Thus God rendered the wickedness of Abimelech, which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren.

Of the Shechemites—for supporting Abimelech in his wickedness. Jud. 9: at verse 57 we are informed:—And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads.

Of Ahab and his wife Jezebel—for their cruel murder of Naboth 1 Kings 21. The sentence pronounced upon Ahab was:—In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine. Verse 19. Upon Jezebel. The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel. Verse 23. In chapter 22, we have an account of the execution of these sentences.

Of the Ammonites. Ezek., chap. 21. At verse 30, God says, I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity. In chap. 22, we read that this sentence was executed. At verse 31, God says, Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God.

Of Solomon—for licentiousness and idolatry. 1 Kings, chap. 11. In this chapter, we are told that God, as a punishment upon Solomon, stirred up enemies against him both at home and abroad, and gave him no peace in his kingdom during the remainder of his life and reign.

Of Jeroboam—for idolatry. 1 Kings, chapters 12 and 14. His family was cut off, and the peace of his kingdom destroyed. He himself was afflicted with a withered hand, for laying violent hands upon the "man of God."

Of Baasha—for the same sin. 1 Kings, chap. 16. He was afflicted with the same or similar judgments to those that befell Jeroboam.

Of Ahaziah—for inquiring of Baal-zebub, instead of God, concerning his sickness. 2 Kings, chap. 1. He was punished with death.

Of Jehoram—for idolatry. 2 Chron., chap. 21. A great plague was sent upon his people, his children, and his wives. He was afflicted with great sickness—an incurable disease of his bowels, which lasted two years, and finally terminated in death.

Of Manasseh — for the same. 2 Kings 21 : 3—6. 2 Chron. 33 : 2—15. In 2 Chron. 33 : 10, 11, we read, And the Lord spake to Manasseh, and to his people ; but they would not hearken. Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains of the host of Assyria, which took Manasseh among the thorns, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

Of Amaziah — for the same. 2 Chron., chap. 25. He was defeated in battle, and finally his subjects conspired against him and put him to death.

Of Moses and Aaron. Numb. 20 : 12. Of Judas, for betraying Christ. Acts 1 : 18. Now this man (Judas) purchased a field with the reward of iniquity ; and falling headlong he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

Of Ananias and his wife Sapphira, for lying to God. Acts 5 : 1—10. Both were struck down dead.

Of Herod. Acts 12 : 21—23. And upon a set day, Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory : and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

Of Elymas the sorcerer, for attempting to turn the deputy from the faith. Acts 13 : 8—11. He was smitten with blindness for a season, and there fell on him a mist and a darkness.

The above instances are but a few out of the very many recorded in the Bible of Divine punishment inflicted in this world. We might cite the instances of God's judgments upon the Jewish people during their sojourn in the wilderness; yea, during their whole history from the earliest period down to the present time. We might cite his judgments upon the different heathen nations for their oppression of the Jews; his judgments on Babylon, Assyria, Tyre, Sidon, Chorazin, Bethsaida, Capernaum, and Jerusalem. But the above instances are sufficient to show that mankind are sometimes, at least, rewarded and punished in this life.

SECTION IV.

Remarks on Rewards and Punishments.

The three preceding sections are designed to prove, not that there is, or will be, no retribution in the future world, but that there is a retribution in this. We have purposely omitted those threatenings contained in the Bible which, by some, are supposed to relate to a punishment to be inflicted in a future state of existence. The strongest of those passages containing them, and those most relied on by the advocates of future retribution, will be considered in the course of this work.

It appears to us that on no subject whatever have mankind so greatly and so generally erred as on the subject of rewards and punishments. And on few, if any subjects, is it more important to the well-being and happiness of man that he should have correct views and information.

The theory of rewards and punishments, which has most extensively prevailed in the world, is this: That this world is a state of probation or trial, where mankind are forming characters for eternity. That there is no such thing as retributive justice in this world; but that the reward of virtue, and punishment of vice, are reserved to be administered in a future state of existence. In opposition to this theory we urge the following objections.

1. It renders the reward of virtue, and the punishment of vice, extremely uncertain. God is unchangeable; his law is immutable, and his system of moral government is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. If, therefore, virtue goes unrewarded, and vice unpunished, in time, what proof have we that such will not always continue to be the case? We are aware that some writers have asserted that "mankind are not rewarded and punished in time, therefore they will be in eternity." But what kind of logic is this? Is the conclusion embraced in the premises? So far from it the only legitimate inference or conclusion to be drawn from the premises is this: Mankind are not rewarded nor punished in time, therefore they never will be. If God is not just in this world, we have no proof that he ever will be.

2. If this theory be admitted to be true, it renders it absolutely certain that some virtuous actions will never be rewarded, and that some vicious acts will never be punished. All mankind do some good and some evil. If, therefore, some are admitted into heaven because the balance of their actions have been good, then they will receive no retribution for their sins. On the other hand if some men go to hell because the balance of their actions have been evil, then they will receive no reward for their good deeds. If mankind do not go to heaven on the ground of merit, but because they have complied with the conditions of the gospel, then those who comply with these conditions will not be punished for their sins; and those who do not comply, will not be rewarded for their virtues. If mankind go to heaven by reason of some miraculous change, which is wrought in them in this life, it amounts to precisely the same thing. Those who experience this change will not be punished for the sins which they have committed; those who do not experience it will not be rewarded for their good deeds.

3. It destroys all distinction between the effects of good and evil in this world. According to this theory, good is not good, because it produces happiness here; nor evil evil, because it produces misery. If it be admitted that the virtuous, in consequence of their virtues, are more happy than the vicious, or that the vicious, in consequence of their vices, are more miserable than the virtuous, this overthrows the theory against which we are contending, because it is an admission that there is a sort of retribution in this life. But, so far from this being admitted, it is even contended by some that, as a general thing, the righteous suffer more in this world than the wicked, and that the wicked enjoy more happiness than the righteous. The advocates of this opinion admit a distinction between the effects of good and evil, to be sure; but it is a distinction altogether in favor of evil. If this be true, then vice is rewarded with happiness, and virtue with misery! How do the advocates of this opinion know but that such a state of things may always continue? If so, then in order to be happy we must be vicious, and in order to avoid misery we must avoid practising virtue. A theory which can be reduced to such absurdities cannot possibly be true. We know of nothing that is evil except that which lessens happiness, and produces misery; nor of anything that is good except that which produces happiness, and lessens misery. Now, if the opinion just referred to be true, then good is converted into evil, and evil into good.

4. It supposes that causes may exist, and be in operation in this world, without producing any effect whatever. It is no more true that an effect cannot exist without a cause, than it is that a cause cannot exist without producing an effect. Now, virtue and vice exist in this world, and are causes; they must, therefore, produce their effects. To suppose that the vicious enjoy more happiness than the virtuous, is to suppose that virtue is the cause of misery, and vice the cause of happiness.

5. It is contrary to analogy. It places the effects and consequences of men's actions altogether beyond the sphere in which they act, and involves the absurd idea that we can sow our seed in one field and reap the harvest in another. Mankind exercise their physical powers — eat, drink and sleep; cultivate the social relations of life — love their parents, their wives, their husbands, and their children, without expecting to be rewarded for it in a future state of existence. Why, then, can they not love God, obey his law, cultivate and exercise their intellectual and moral faculties, without expecting a reward in the future world?

6. It is of exceedingly pernicious moral tendency. The very idea of retribution in another world for deeds performed in this, presupposes that virtue is not rewarded, nor vice punished, here. Now, to promulgate such a sentiment to the world is directly calculated to produce the following impressions upon the minds of men. Some will be led to conclude that, as neither virtue nor vice are rewarded now, they never will be; and, therefore, it is a matter of perfect indifference which of them is practised. Others will be led to conclude that happiness and misery are not at all dependent upon men's actions, but that all the evils of this world are a kind of matter of course, and unescapable and unavoidable. Hence they will make no exertions to secure happiness on the one hand nor to avoid evil or misery on the other. Again, others will come to the conclusion, that the reward of virtue, and the punishment of vice, are extraneous, — entirely separate and abstract from the deeds performed, — and that, therefore, virtue is not to be loved and practised for its own intrinsic value, nor vice shunned and detested for its own intrinsic odiousness. Hence they will suppose that the reward of the virtuous, in a future state, is a sort of offset, or compensation, to them for the trials, and deprivations, and sufferings, which they have endured in the practice of virtue; and the punishment of the wicked an offset to the happiness they have enjoyed in the practice of sin. This view of the subject is directly calculated to frighten and drive men from virtue, and disincline them to its practice.

If, in addition to the doctrine of no retribution in this life, you add to it that the wicked enjoy themselves the best in this world, then you increase its demoralizing tendency in a tenfold degree; because this is not only calculated to make men hate virtue, but it is directly calculated to make them love vice. Now, man loves happiness; — this is "his being's end and aim." God has bound this law of our nature "fast in fate." He has so constituted us that we have an instinctive desire of happiness, and dread of misery. Men will pursue that course which they think will yield the greatest amount of happiness. Tell them, then, that to be virtuous they will be miserable, and that to be vicious they will be happy, and they will cling to vice with a death-like grasp, and avoid virtue as they would avoid the jaws of death.

If, in addition to this, you add that the retributions of eternity may be easily escaped by a timely repentance, then you have got the old serpent's doctrine in complete perfection. "Ye shall not surely die." That it is by no means certain. Some way of escape will be provided, by which the threatened calamity will not come upon you. Under the influence of this doctrine, thousands have come to the conclusion to secure the happiness of this life by a course of sin, and then by a timely repentance escape the threatened punishment, and secure the happiness of eternity into the bargain. If there is any doctrine on earth which gives man a complete license to sin, this is the very one. We know of no doctrine which can possibly be worse. Atheism promises no reward to the vicious. Deism promises not the exemption of punishment to the wicked but this doctrine promises happiness to the wicked, and assures them there is a way to escape all just retribution. But this doctrine is as false as it is pernicious. It deceived our first parents. It has deceived millions of the human race, and led them the downward way to shame, misery, disgrace and death. The siren song is still ringing in the ears of men, and deceiving thousands. It is high time it was banished from the world. May God speed the day!

7. It is contrary to human observation. Even some of the advocates of future retribution admit that the virtuous are most happy, and the vicious most miserable, in this world. The ancient heathen philosophers admitted this. A certain leading divine, of New England, who taught future retribution, was heard to say: — "If there was no God, no heaven, no hell, no future state of existence, he would practise virtue for its own intrinsic value, and for its present reward." This is the true doctrine. When this sentiment prevails among men the world will be reformed, and not before. Let us now look over our own country, our own state, our own town, our own neighborhood, and ask ourselves what class of men, of all those with whom we are acquainted, are the most happy Are they the idle, the dissolute, the abandoned, the vicious? That man's powers of perception must be exceedingly small, and out of order, who cannot see that such is not the case. Again, let us ask ourselves what class are the most miserable. Are they the industrious, the prudent, the virtuous? Are they those who deal their bread to the hungry, who clothe the naked, visit the sick, rejoice with those who do rejoice, and weep with those that weep? So far from it, if we find a truly happy man, he is one in whose heart virtue reigns triumphant.

8. It is contrary to human experience. Who has not experienced the pleasure and satisfaction derived from the consciousness of having done his duty? Who has not experienced the reward of virtue? Surely no one who has ever practised it. Virtue tends to misery, does it? No. If all the children of virtue could speak out on this subject, their united testimony would be, without one dissenting voice, it is not so; the reverse is the fact. The natural tendency of virtue is to happiness. Why is it that the wicked are miserable? Why is it that the greatest criminals, in the last hour of their earthly existence, invariably certify that their whole life has

9. It is contrary to the plain declarations of the word of God.

(1.) This theory says, God does not judge mankind in this world. The Bible declares, "Verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth.' And again, "I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment and righteousness, in the earth." Ps. 58: 11; Jer. 9: 24.

(2.) It declares that there is no reward for virtue, nor punishment for vice, in this world. But the Bible says, "Verily there is a reward for the righteous." Again, "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." Ps. 58: 11; Prov. 11: 31.

(3.) It teaches that it is a matter of perfect indifference, so far as our present happiness or misery is concerned, what course we pursue. But the Bible informs us that "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Prov. 3: 7. The objector may say, "This is undoubtedly true of wisdom's ways, but it is just as true of the ways of folly." To this we reply that the Bible, in strong contrast with this, says of the wicked, "Destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace they have not known." Rom. 3: 16, 17.

(4.) It promises equal happiness to the righteous and wicked in this world. But the Scriptures tell us, "Great peace have they who love thy law." Ps. 119: 165. It may be said, "This is true of the righteous, but it is equally true of the wicked." We answer: the Bible affirms "There is no peace to the wicked." Isa. 48: 22.

(5.) It promises a way of escape from just punishment to the sinner. But God says he "will by no means clear the guilty.' "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." Exod. 34: 7; Prov. 11: 21.

(6.) It teaches that it is a matter of no consequence, so far as this life is concerned, whether the intellectual and moral faculties of man are under the guidance, control and direction, of the animal propensities, or whether the passions and propensities are governed by the intellect and morals. But the Bible teaches that "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Rom. 8: 6.

10. It comes in contact with facts which are plainly and explic- itly stated in the Bible. The Bible abounds with instances of divine punishment inflicted in this life. In Section III. of this Chapter we have collected thirty instances of this kind; and these comprise but a small portion out of the vast number that are recorded in the Scriptures. It has been stated that "although God does sometimes see fit to pour out his judgments upon nations and communities in their collective capacity, yet he never metes out retributive justice to single individuals." This is not true. Out of the instances collected, referred to above, twenty-three cases are those of individuals. It is a fact, then, that mankind are rewarded and punished in this life. Of course the doctrine of no retribution in this world falls to the ground.

Such are our objections to the doctrine of retribution in another world for deeds performed in this life. We will now take the following position. MANKIND ARE REWARDED AND PUNISHED IN THIS LIFE. This position we sustain by the following arguments:

1. From the justice of God. God's justice is active. Like all the other attributes of the Deity, it is an operative principle. We might as well suppose that power, that benevolence, or love, could lay perfectly dormant and inactive in the Deity, as to suppose this of justice. The highest exercise of justice consists in suitably and equitably rewarding and punishing all moral agents according to their works. Justice requires that the virtuous be rewarded, at the time when, and in the place where, they are virtuous; and that the vicious be punished at the time, and in the place, where they are vicious. If, therefore, the justice of God is an active principle, mankind are as much rewarded and punished here as they ever will be. It follows, from this argument, that if mankind, or any portion of them, practise vice in a future state of existence, they will be punished there; but then, it will not be for sins committed here, but for sins committed there. If there are any who suppose that vice will be practised in the spiritual world, it belongs to them to prove it. The question whether vice will be practised there does not belong to our present subject.

2. From the nature of God's moral government. That man is subject to certain laws, and that these laws were instituted by the Creator, will not be disputed. Well, what was the design of God in instituting these laws? Was it to promote his own happiness, or to add to his glory? Surely this will not be pretended. For God is now, and always has been, infinitely glorious. His glory, therefore, cannot be increased nor diminished. He is perfectly happy in and of himself; yea, infinitely happy "in his own immortality." In giving laws to man, then, he designed the good of man. His laws, therefore, must be founded in the very nature and fitness of things. They must be based in the very nature and constitution of man. They must be designed to point out to man the course which he ought to pursue, in order to secure to himself the greatest amount of happiness; and the course which he ought to avoid, if he would avoid his own misery. Hence, misery must be connected with the violation of these laws, and happiness with their observance. It is in this sense that God has connected happiness with virtue, and misery with vice. It is in this sense that punishment treads close upon the heels of transgression. It is in this sense that virtue is its own reward, and vice its own punishment.

3. From the history of mankind. No one acquainted with the history of the human race, need be told that the historic page abounds with instances of the displays of God's retributive justice. Tyrants and oppressors may have flourished and prospered for a while, and to all outward appearance may have been happy. But their own confessions have revealed the fires which raged within, and the torments which reigned in their bosoms. And sooner or later their violence, their cruelties and their oppressions, have been visited upon their own heads. The description of such, given by the Psalmist, is true to the letter. "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like the green bay-tree. Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found." Nations may have been cruel and oppressive, and may have risen to great power and worldly grandeur by such means; but it was only to receive a more tremendous fall, and to experience the mortification and shame of being in their turn the down-trodden and the oppressed. All of which verifies the truth of the proverb, "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov. 14: 34; Ps. 37: 35, 36.

4. From the observation and experience of mankind. See objections to the doctrine of future retribution. Obj. 7 and 8.

5. From the direct and positive testimony of the Bible. See objections as above. Obj. 9. Specifications 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

6. From facts which are clearly stated in the Bible. See objections as above. Obj. 10.

We will now notice the objections to the doctrine of retribution in this life. It is objected,

1. "That the pious and virtuous are frequently unfortunate, and sometimes miserable, in this world." This is undoubtedly true; but, we ask, are the virtuous miserable and unfortunate because they are virtuous? In other words, do they suffer the penalty of God's moral law? This will not be pretended. But if they do not, then their miseries must be attributed to some other cause. This leads us to remark, that man is governed by three different sets of laws. He is a physical, intellectual, and moral being; and is governed by physical, intellectual, and moral laws. These laws operate separately and independently of each other. If man obeys the physical laws, he will receive the reward of health and physical enjoyment. If the intellectual, he will experience intellectual enjoyment. If the moral, he will enjoy that happiness which flows from the exercise of the moral faculties. If he obeys them all, he will derive pleasure and satisfaction from each of these sources; and experience all the happiness which is allotted to a human being. It must also be remembered that mankind, both good and bad, are subject to various evils and misfortunes, which are not of our own procuring, which cannot be warded off, and which cannot be considered as the penalty of any law whatever. If these facts are constantly borne in mind, they will serve to explain all the seeming discrepancy in the administration of rewards and punishments. Again, mankind are extremely liable to be deceived and mistaken in their judgment on this subject. It may be well for us to mention the several grounds of deception. 1. They may be deceived by the pretensions and professions of men. It is not every man who professes to be virtuous, who really is so. It is often the case that those who profess the most religion have the least; and those who profess none at all have the most. If, therefore, mankind calculate the deserts of their fellow-men by their professions, they will often judge a man to be deserving of reward when he is not and another to be deserving of punishment when he is not. Certainly, we cannot expect that God will bend himself to the notions of such concerning justice. 2. Mankind are liable to be mistaken in their estimate of the amount and extent of the guilt of their fellow-men. All men are not equally guilty for committing the same act. Two men may commit the same act, and one may be greatly guilty, and the other not guilty at all. There are different degrees of responsibility or accountability. In relation to the physical and intellectual laws, it is, perhaps, strictly true that ignorance of those laws excuses no man. That is, man will suffer the consequences of disobeying them, whether he has a knowledge of their existence or not. But in relation to the moral laws, ignorance of them, where that ignorance is not voluntary, does excuse a man to some extent at least. We may, then, greatly err in calculating the guilt of our fellow-men. God only knows the heart. He only knows to what extent men are guilty. He only knows how much of reward or punishment his creatures are deserving of; and we have no reason to expect that he will dispense his rewards and punishments to suit our views of what justice requires. 3. Mankind may be deceived by their own estimate of themselves. They may think themselves deserving of reward when they are not, and undeserving of punishment when in fact they deserve it. They may be ignorant of the physical laws, and live in the habitual violation of them, and not know it. They may think themselves perfectly guiltless for so doing, and they may be so; but the consequences will be precisely the same. They must suffer pain, sickness and disease. They may form a wrong estimate of what constitutes virtue, and think they are practising it, when they are not. In this case, although they may look for reward, they will not receive it, for they do not deserve it. This was the case with the ancient Pharisees. They made religion consist in the practice of forms and ceremonies. These they faithfully performed, and judged themselves to be very pious, holy and virtuous men. But if the testimony of Jesus is to be credited, they were very far from righteousness; and although they judged themselves deserving of reward, yet they were not.

Now, in reference to those who profess to be virtuous, are esteemed to be such by their fellow-men, and yet are miserable and unhappy; for instance, suffer pain, sickness, and all the deprivations consequent upon ill health. It may be that their misfortunes are of that kind to which all are liable, and from which none are entirely exempt. Perhaps they have inherited a bad constitution. In that case, it is their misfortune and not their fault. It may be they have voluntarily — either ignorantly or knowingly — violated the physical laws of their nature. If they have done it ignorantly, they cannot escape the consequences; if knowingly, they have incurred a penalty which they ought to suffer, and will suffer, so long as they continue to violate those laws. But, it may be, they are not what they profess to be — virtuous men. Even if their outward conduct is moral, they may perform all their good deeds from bad motives; and, in that case, are not entitled to any reward, nor will they receive any. The truth is, a man may cultivate the moral faculties ever so much, and live in the strictest conformity to God's moral law; yet, if he disregards the laws of health, eats too much, drinks too much, sleeps too much, exercises too little or too much, exposes himself unnecessarily or necessarily, or eats, drinks, and sleeps too little, he cannot escape the consequences. The fact of his obeying the moral laws will not exempt him from the penalty of violating the laws of his physical constitution. As a moral being, he may experience that happiness which flows from the exercise and cultivation of his moral faculties. As a physical being, he may, at the same time, suffer pain, sickness and disease, as a necessary consequence of neglect or violation of the physical laws. But in no case, if the man is truly a virtuous man, can you rob him of virtue's reward. He may meet with misfortunes. His riches may "take to themselves wings and fly away." Friends may desert him. He may be persecuted. He may be incarcerated in prison, or confined within the gloomy walls of the dungeon. He may be suspended on the gallows, tied to the stake, and around him may be gathered the fagot and the flame. But, "amid the war of elements, the wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds," he will be unmoved. He walks forth in all the "conscious dignity of independent virtue." In prosperity he rejoices; in adversity he is resigned. He loves virtue for its own intrinsic value; practises it because he loves it, and for its present reward. His soul is stayed on God; for he knows that God is on the side of virtue. In life, and in death, he feels and experiences the "soul's calm sunshine and the heartfelt joy which is virtue's prize."

2. It is objected "that the wicked are frequently prosperous and happy in this life." That the wicked may be prosperous and happy, in one sense, is undoubtedly true. That is, it may be true of the merely immoral man. But that they are ever prosperous and happy in the sense that the virtuous are, or in the highest sense of those terms, we deny. But the objector says "he is acquainted with a number of wicked men, who evidently enjoy themselves as well as any people on earth." Hold, my dear sir. Are you sure of this? Appearances are often deceptive. We frequently see our fellow-creatures placed in circumstances which we judge to be favorable, and conclude they must be happy; but, on becoming acquainted with the facts, we learn they are not. Indeed, sometimes men appear to be happy, and act happy, when they are not. Paganini, of Paris, in France, was a celebrated wit, musician and theatrical performer. He was one of the most jocose and humorsome of men. He was thought to be the most happy of men. He was considered a very amusing companion, and his company was sought for by all. One day Paganini went to a celebrated physician of Paris, and, without informing him who he was, complained of habitual melancholy. "Have you been long troubled with it?" asked the physician. "Yes, for a number of years." "Does it give you much trouble?" "Yes, it destroys all my peace. It troubles me by night and by day; and I have frequently been more than half inclined to destroy myself." "I advise you," said the physician, "to find the company of Paganini, and keep it: he will cure you of your melancholy." "Alas!" cried the unhappy man, "I am that very Paganini."* Tiberius was a Roman emperor. He had abundance of wealth, was enthroned in power, and enjoyed every means of gratifying his sensual appetites to the very full. He was placed in circumstances which, by the mass of mankind, would be judged favorable to produce happiness. But was Tiberius happy? The following letter, written by him to the Roman Senate, shows that he was not: "What to write, conscript fathers, in what terms to express myself, or what to refrain from writing, is a matter of such perplexity, that if I know how to decide may the just gods and goddesses of vengeance doom me to die in pangs worse than those under which I linger every day." On this, Tacitus makes the following remarks: "We have here the features of the inward man. His crimes retaliated upon him with the keenest retribution; so true is the saying of the great philosopher, the oracle of ancient wisdom (Socrates), that, if the minds of tyrants were laid open to our view, we should see them gashed and mangled with the whips and stings of horror and remorse. By blows and stripes the flesh is made to quiver; and, in like manner, cruelty and inordinate passions, malice and evil deeds, become internal executioners, and, with unceasing torture, goad and lacerate the heart. Of this truth Tiberius is a melancholy instance. Neither the imperial dignity, nor the gloom of solitude, nor the rocks of Caprea, could shield him from himself. He lived on the rack of guilt, and his wounded spirit groaned in agony." How many thousands and millions of cases of the same kind there have been, and are now! And it is to be feared that, in consequence of human folly, there will be thousands and millions more. When, therefore, we see the wicked apparently happy, we ought to remember that their happiness may be in appearance only, and not in reality. But again. It may be that those whom the objector esteems to be so wicked, and who he thinks are so happy, are not so wicked as he supposes, after all. Under a very rough exterior many a man carries the very best of hearts; and under the cloak of religion, yea, under the very "livery of the court of heaven," many a man carries a heart of the most consummate knavery, hypocrisy and deception. But we have said that the wicked, i. e., the merely immoral man, may be happy. But in what sense may he be happy? By the merely immoral man, we mean one who is destitute of moral principles, and neglects to cultivate the moral faculties. Such men there have been, and such men there are, who, notwithstanding their utter destitution of moral principle, yet yield the strictest obedience to the physical laws. In such cases, you will see in them the stout, muscular, athletic and robust frame, a fine flow of health and spirits, and perhaps they may be lively, cheerful, and, in a certain sense, happy. And why should they not be? They have obeyed those laws upon the observance of which hangs suspended our physical enjoyment; and why should they not receive their reward? But what kind of happiness is it which they enjoy? we ask again. Is it that high and holy kind enjoyed by the righteous? No. They know nothing of the satisfaction which is derived from the consciousness of having done our duty. They are strangers to the happiness which flows from the exercise of the moral faculties. They experience none of the rewards of virtue, for they do not practise virtue.

* This story is quoted from memory. We may be mistaken in the name, but are certain we are not in the fact.

Their enjoyment, therefore, is merely of a sensual, earthly, animal kind. They enjoy themselves in the same manner as do the brutes; in the same manner as does the horse, the ox, or the swine. Reader, is this the greatest good of life? Is this the highest happiness allotted to human beings? We tell you, nay. And, if you think it is, we tell you, you have made a sad and most fatal mistake, which, sooner or later, and before you leave this earthly clime, you will learn to your sorrow.

But some will say, perhaps, "We know the doctrine of retribution in this life is not true, for we have practised virtue, and have received no reward." If you have received no reward, it must be for some of the following reasons. Either you are not what you profess to be, or you have made a false estimate of what constitutes virtue; or you practise it from wrong motives; or, in looking for an imaginary reward in a future world, you have overlooked the real one, and trampled it under your feet. If it is for either of these reasons, your case forms no objection to our theory. You receive no reward, for the reason that you do not deserve any.

3. Another objection is, "The theory of retribution in this life is of bad moral tendency." Of bad moral tendency! Why? How? "O!" it is said, "this theory makes all reward and punishment limited, and confines both to this world. Consequently, the inducements presented to the mind of man, for him to practise virtue and refrain from vice, are not great enough." "Man," it is said, "is greatly influenced by appeals to his hopes and fears. Hence, the greater the reward promised, and punishment threatened, the greater the influence."

This theory, then, "makes all reward and punishment limited." Well, suppose it does. Is not man a finite being? Is he not exceedingly limited in all his capacities, capabilities, and powers? Is he not a frail child of humanity, and extremely liable to err? No man can dispute that he is. Should he not, then, be the subject of limited rewards and punishments? How absurd to suppose the contrary! The very fact, then, on which this objection is based, that this theory makes rewards and punishments limited, is a strong confirmation of its truth. But, "it confines rewards and punishments to this world." Very well. Where does man do his deeds of virtue and vice? Is it not in this world? Most certainly it is. Well, what time and place more suitable to reward and punish him, than at the time when, and in the place where, he deserves it? But, "the inducements are not sufficient." Are not? But do men love their wives, parents, brothers, sisters, or children, because they expect to be rewarded for it in another world? Or do they refrain from hating them for fear of being punished in another world if they do? If such be the fact, then our sentiments of respect for human nature must sink into nothing; and all men may exclaim with Brutus: "O virtue, I have worshipped you as a god, but have found thou art but an empty name!" Again, does the farmer labor and toil to cultivate his farm, sow his seed, and gather his crops, thinking that he will be rewarded for it in eternity? Does the mechanic pursue his daily avocation for the sake of any other reward than that which he receives here? Will a man perform a day's labor with any more faithfulness or cheerfulness, under the promise of a reward however great in eternity, than he will under the promise of a dollar at the close of his day's labor? Once more. Do the wicked practise sin in this world with the expectation of being rewarded for it in another? No. All these are actuated solely and simply by present motives. If, then, the wicked can be induced to practise sin for the sake of the pleasure which they imagine is connected therewith in this life, cannot the virtuous be induced to practise virtue for the sake of that happiness which is the certain and sure reward of it here? But suppose those whom we denominate the virtuous are actuated by the motives which the objector would present, are they worthy of the appellation, virtuous, which we bestow upon them? Suppose you see a man administer to the wants and necessities of his fellow-men. You ask him why he does it. He replies: "For the sake of obtaining heaven." You ask him if he has no sympathies for human kind; no benevolence of heart; no humanity to man. And he tells you "no, he is actuated by higher motives than these, his object is to secure his own happiness in the paradise above." What would you think of such a warm-hearted philanthropist as this? Or, suppose you see a man tempted to do evil, to steal, rob, or murder, as the case may be, but he resists. You ask him why he did not commit the act. He replies: "I most certainly should have done it, had I not been afraid of going to hell if I did." What would you think of a man of such strong virtuous principle as this? Would you think either of these characters meritorious, or deserving of any reward what ever? Certainly not. No. Barbarians practise on better principles than these; and the veriest heathen on earth would scout such morality and virtue.

"But man is a being actuated by hope and fear." So he is. But does it follow that we are to make unreal representations to his hopes and fears? We know this plan has been adopted. Parents sometimes adopt it in the government of their children. They will tell them of ghosts and hobgoblins, of immortal devils, and bears in the cellar. But what rational man ever supposed that children were ever made any better by such a course of treatment? The fears of mankind have been appealed to too much. Past history proves that sanguinary laws and cruel penalties have always defeated their own object. The fear of an endless hell may perhaps restrain the outward actions of some, but it never made one single soul any better. It has no power to purify the human heart.

The reward which the objector would offer is greater than the one we offer, to be sure; but it is more remote, and by thousands would not be judged to be very certain. The punishment which the objector would threaten is greater than that we threaten. But the objector himself provides a way by which it may be easily escaped. Timely repentance will wipe off the stain, and exonerate from the penalty. Hence, there is no certainty about it. Now, it appears to us that it must be obvious to every man of sense, that the preaching of rewards and punishments which are absolutely certain and sure, will exert a more powerful influence upon man, than the preaching of rewards and punishments which are uncertain, even although the latter may be much greater than the former. Is the doctrine of present rewards and punishments, then, of bad moral tendency? Is it dangerous to inform mankind that happiness is connected with virtue, and misery with vice? Does not man love happiness, and dread misery? Is it wrong, then, to tell him that if he practises virtue, he will be happy? that if he practises sin, he will certainly and inevitably be miserable? Is it because mankind have believed this doctrine in past ages, that licentiousness has abounded and sin so extensively prevailed? No. God knows it is not so. It is because they have believed that there is pleasure in sin, and that virtue and religion were designed to make their pleasures less on earth. The world can never be reformed until this wicked, and abominable, and pernicious error, is rooted out.

When mankind are brought to believe, firmly and sincerely, that there is a reward for virtue this side of a located heaven, and a recompense for vice this side of a located hell, then virtue will reign triumphant, and a more powerful, thorough, and general reformation will take place than the world ever yet saw.

4. It has been objected that "This is the same doctrine that was held by the ancient Sadducees." We know the Sadducees believed in the doctrine of present rewards and punishments. In this we agree with them. But they also held that death was the last end of man. From this we dissent. We are not, therefore, Sadducees, because we happen to agree with them on the doctrine of rewards and punishments. We believe in the existence of one God. So does the objector; so did the Pharisees; so did the Sadducees. But is the objector a Universalist, Pharisee, or Sadducee, because he agrees with them in believing in one God? The Sadducees believed implicitly in the five books of Moses, and received them as a rule of faith and practice. They could not find the doctrine of future retribution in them; but they did find the doctrine of retribution in this life; hence they rejected the former, and embraced the latter. And this is one of our reasons for doing the same. The Sadducees held other doctrines, which in a great degree nullified the influence of their views respecting rewards and punishments upon them; but, notwithstanding this, they were a much more moral, virtuous, and respectable sect than their neighbors the Pharisees, although the latter believed in the (supposed to be) purifying doctrine of future retribution. They never received half the censures, nor half the condemnatory denunciations, from Jesus Christ, that the Pharisees did. Jesus frequently spoke of the Pharisees as "hypocrites, whited sepulchres, serpents, generation of vipers," &c.; but he never bestowed these appellations upon the Sadducees. And although he warned his disciples to beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees and the Sadducees, yet we are not informed that the views of the Sadducees respecting rewards and punishments was the doctrine referred to. It is far more probable that it was their doctrine respecting a future state.

5. It is said "That there is no mercy in this system of rewards and punishments." No mercy in it! Is it so, then, that God cannot be just, and at the same time be merciful? If so, then to those who are punished God is not merciful, and to those who are saved, he is not just. This impeaches both the justice and mercy of the divine Being. The highest exercise of mercy consists in withholding unnecessary or unjust punishment. Hence, God can punish his creatures all that justice requires, and at the same time be merciful to them. He can be both just and merciful at the same time. Cannot a parent chastise his children all they deserve, and do it in mercy? So can God. Hence the Psalmist says, "Unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy; for thou renderest to every man according to his works." Ps. 62 : 12.

6. But it is also said "There is no grace in this system." "Mankind," it is said, "according to this system, are punished all they deserve; and, therefore, there is no room for the exercise of grace." Indeed! But are not these rewards and punishments limited? And is there not room enough for the exercise of grace after the dispensation of rewards and punishments has ceased? Cannot a father punish and reward his children all they merit, and, after they arrive to the age of twenty-one years, give them each a farm as an act of grace? And cannot God reward and punish his creatures all they merit in time, and in eternity bestow upon them immortality, as his gift to them through grace? Certainly, the fact of our having been justly dealt by in time gives us no claim on God for any benefits to be extended to us in another world. But we have shown it to be the doctrine of the Bible that "God will render to every man according to his works." If, therefore, the objector thinks there is no mercy nor grace in this theory, we leave him to settle the dispute with the Bible.

7. It is objected that "This theory gives no rational account of what, or in what, the punishment of sin consists." We think we have been sufficiently plain and definite on this subject; but, if the objector is not satisfied, we will now try to make ourselves understood. The nature of the punishment of sin depends altogether upon the nature of the sin committed. If it is a neglect of the physical laws, then it is a deprivation of the enjoyment which flows from the exercise of the physical powers. If a violation of these laws, it is the physical pain and misery which is the necessary consequence. If it is a neglect of the intellectual laws, it is a deprivation of the pleasure derived from the exercise of these faculties; and, besides, the individual must be deplorably ignorant, and, in point of intellect, sink to a level with the brute creation. If a violation of these laws, it is mental uneasiness and unhappiness, frequently terminating in partial derangement, or positive insanity. If it is a neglect of the moral laws, it is a deprivation of the happiness which results from the exercise of the moral powers. If a violation of these laws, it is the misery and unhappiness which follow necessarily. If it is both a neglect and violation of either or all of these laws, then the punishment, as is seen, will be both negative and positive; a deprivation on the one hand, and positive suffering on the other. We trust the subject is now sufficiently plain, and if so, the objection we are considering falls to the ground.

8. Another objection is that, "According to this theory, much of the punishment, which is experienced by the guilty, consists in remorse of conscience." "Now," it is said, "it is well known that by a long-continued course of sin, conscience may become completely paralyzed and inactive, so that it ceases to reproach or sting the transgressor." Whether the conscience can ever become entirely dormant and inactive is very doubtful. If there are any cases of this kind, they must be exceedingly rare; and they form exceptions to the general rule. It is true, the Bible speaks of some whose consciences were "seared as with a hot iron;" but this does not prove that their consciences had become extinct, nor entirely inactive. That the conscience may become measurably dormant is undoubtedly true; but it must be recollected that if there is such a thing as remorse of conscience, there is such a thing as the pleasure derived from a conscience "void of offence." Conscience not only condemns us for our faults, but it approves us for our virtues. In proportion, therefore, as an individual becomes insensible to remorse of conscience, in that same proportion he becomes insensible to its approving smiles. Now, does he gain anything by this? Is he placed in any better circumstances? in circumstances more favorable to the enjoyment of happiness? No. As the inward monitor speaks not to approve, so its warning voice speaks but feebly. In that case, the individual becomes more reckless and daring; less circumspect and cautious, and more bold in his crimes. Of course he is more easily detected, and more exposed to the penalties which are annexed to the laws and institutions which have been established by man. We can imagine no deprivation which can be worse, nor no condition on earth which can be more deplorable, than for an individual to be destitute of conscience. The fact, then, on which this objection is based forms no real objection to the theory we are advocating.

9. It may be objected that, "As a part of the punishment of sin consists in remorse of conscience, and as, according to Phrenology, some men have a large share of conscience, and others only a small degree, therefore, those who deserve the least punishment will receive the most, and those who deserve the most will receive the least." To this we reply, — If two men perform the same act, and one of them possesses a great share of conscience, he is guilty in a great degree; if the other has naturally only a small share of conscience, he is guilty only in a small degree. One, therefore, deserves a great degree of punishment, the other only a small degree. This objection, then, only proves that our theory of rewards and punishments is one of the strictest impartiality, equity, and justice.

10. It may be asked, "How does the self-murderer get his punishment?" Self-murder! We know of no such crime. Murder implies malice aforethought. But the Bible informs us that "no man ever yet hated his own flesh." The crime of self-murder is therefore impossible. We know that a certain declaration is often quoted to prove that there is such a crime, namely, "No self-murderer shall enter the kingdom of heaven." This declaration is supposed by some to be in the Bible; but it is not. There is no such passage in the book. The word self, and murder, or murderer, are nowhere connected in the whole Bible. By the "self-murderer," we presume the objector means the suicide. If, then, it be asked, "How does the suicide get his punishment?" we answer: The act of suicide is generally, if not always, committed by those who are of unsound mind, — those who are acting under the influence of either partial or positive derangement. It is extremely doubtful whether any person of sane mind ever, coolly and deliberately, in the sober exercise of his judgment, put a period to his own existence. Those who commit the act of suicide under the influence of insanity are not responsible; hence, incur no guilt, and, consequently, no punishment. But, allowing some do commit this act in the exercise of their reason, what then? The whole difficulty in the mind of the objector may arise from a false view which he entertains respecting the object and mode of divine punishment. If you suppose divine punishment to be retaliatory, — that is, that a certain quantum of pain is inflicted on the transgressor, equal in amount to that which he has occasioned, or that he is made to experience a certain amount of evil equal to that which he has produced, or that he is made to suffer simply and solely because he has committed an evil act, — all this is a very great mistake. No. God punishes to reform and make better. His punishments are disciplinary, emendatory, and salutary. He does not, therefore, inflict pain upon the transgressor simply because an evil act has been committed, but in order that the crime may not be repeated. Again, if the objector supposes that God, in the administration of his moral government, is under the necessity of specially interfering and directly punishing his creatures, this is another very great mistake. No. God is under no necessity of guarding the interests of his law by penal enactments and penal sanctions. It is a law, as we have seen, which is founded in the nature and fitness of things, — a law written in the very constitution of man. God's law, therefore, unlike all the laws ever instituted by man, does, by its own operation, absolutely secure the reward of virtue and the punishment of vice. God, to be sure, may, at certain times, and in certain cases, inflict direct punishment upon the violators of his law. But this is not his general mode of administration. As a general thing, we know of no penalty annexed to the law of God except the natural and necessary consequences which flow from its violation; nor any punishment for sin except the natural and necessary consequences which flow from the practice of vice. How strong is the love of life! How instinctively man will cling to it, and shrink from death! How great must be the suffering, and how intense the agony, endured by that mind, which will prompt its possessor to voluntarily cut the strong cord which binds him to earth! "But," you may say, "all this suffering and agony he has brought upon himself by his own voluntary sins." All this may be very true; and, if so, it is a proof that sin is punished in this life. Of the suicide, then, it may be said, that, by a course of sin and transgression, he has plunged himself into misery, until God uses his own hand as the instrument of his own destruction. He is cut off from life and all its endearments, and his career of wickedness has terminated in untimely death. It may be well to mention here that the Bible nowhere enumerates suicide among the catalogue of crimes, nor the suicide among the catalogue of criminals. We would not now wish to be understood as justifying the act of suicide. Very far from it,

We mention this fact because it is a fact, and the reader will bear in mind it is a fact for which we are not responsible. If the objector, therefore, is disposed to cavil, let him cavil at the Bible, not with us. We suppose the reason why the Bible does not speak of suicide as a crime, is because the scripture writers, all of them, took it for granted that it was an act which would not be very frequently committed, and very seldom indeed, if ever, by a person in the sober exercise of his reason and judgment.

11. But the objector may say, "Suppose a man to murder a fellow-being, and the next moment turn round and kill himself — how is he punished for this double crime, committed in the very last moment of his life?" We frankly confess that this is, to all appearance, one of the greatest difficulties, in the way of our theory, which can possibly be stated. We admit it to be a very plausible objection. But, supposing that no satisfactory reply can be made to it, — what then? Let it be borne in mind that this objection is founded on an extreme case. How many of the human family are guilty of this crime? Not one to an hundred thousand. Must it not be a very strong theory against which only one difficulty out of many can be presented, which we, short-sighted mortals, cannot remove? Must not that theory be considered absolutely invulnerable against which only one objection out of many can be urged, which cannot be satisfactorily answered; especially when even that one objection is founded on an extreme case, — a case which rarely happens among men? But we are not afraid to meet this objection in the very face. To murder a human being, and then for the murderer to turn round and kill himself, is an unnatural crime. Charity would lead us to suppose that no man would be guilty of such an act without extraordinary provocation. The man who could commit such a deed must be under the influence of the most powerful animal excitement. His passions, for the time being, must have the complete ascendency over him, and be absolutely uncontrollable. Now, is it not a well-known fact that some men have not that government and control of their passions that others have? And should not these be mitigating circumstances in the case of persons guilty of killing a human being and themselves at the same time? We know that in the eye of those laws instituted by man they would not be. But, we ask, how will they be looked on in the eye of that great law of love which God has instituted for the government of his creatures? We do not ask, how will those persons be looked on by the eyes of men; but we ask, how will they be looked on by the eye of that God who "sees not as man sees," who is acquainted with all the thoughts of his creatures, their motives and intentions? He also is acquainted with our frailty, our liability to err, the circumstances in which we may be placed, and all the influences with which we may be surrounded. He is our Lawgiver and our Judge; and his law, by its own operation, secures to the violator of it all the punishment he thinks him to be deserving of. We ask, again, how will persons guilty of the crime we are considering, under the mitigating circumstances we have named, be looked upon in the eye of that charity which "suffereth long, and is kind," and which requires of mankind that they look not too severely upon the faults and foibles of their fellow-men? That heart must be callous indeed, and insensible to the feelings of humanity, which will prompt its possessor to look on the agonies and sufferings of the suicide, which have been the cause of his raising the hand of destruction upon himself, or upon the miseries endured by that man whose passions are so violent and ungovernable as that he can commit such a crime as the one we are considering, and then say, "It is not enough!" If persons guilty of these crimes deserve our censure, they also deserve our pity and commiseration. If they are guilty, they are also unfortunate. But they deserve our pity no more than does that man who would add one single iota to the pangs and sufferings which they endure. The punishment of those guilty of the crime under consideration, consists in their suffering the natural consequences of sin. A course of sin and folly, after having destroyed the happiness of the unfortunate being, and after he has suffered the pangs and sorrows of the transgressor, has terminated in untimely death.

Such, reader, are the arguments in favor of the doctrine of present rewards and punishments. And such are the objections against it. We now appeal to your candor, and ask, which of the two theories we have had under consideration is most consistent with reason, with common sense, and the Bible? It is of the utmost importance that you should decide this question. If you decide in favor of the theory which we have advocated, you are safe. Sin will have for you no charms, and temptation no power. You will avoid sin as you would avoid the jaws of death, or the poisonous fangs of the serpent; and you will cling to virtue as your only, your chiefest, and your greatest good.

CHAPTER V.

SCRIPTURE TERMS EXPRESSING DURATION.

SECTION I.

On the Scripture usage and meaning of the words ETERNITY, ENDLESS, ETERNAL, EVERLASTING, NEVER, FOREVER, and FOREVER AND EVER.

1. ETERNITY. — This word occurs but once in the Bible. Isa. 57 : 15, "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy," &c. Of course, it is nowhere in the Bible applied to punishment of any kind, either in this world or another. It is never said the wicked shall go into, or suffer, or endure, an eternity of punishment.

2. ENDLESS. — This word does not occur in the Old Testament, and is found but twice in the New. 1 Tim. 1 : 4, "Neither give heed to fables, and endless genealogies," &c. Heb. 7 : 16, "Who (Christ) is made after the power of an endless life." When applied to genealogies it is used in a limited sense; when applied to the immortal life of Christ, which he obtained by being raised from the dead, it is used in an unlimited sense. It is connected with life in the Scriptures, but it is not connected with punishment. We nowhere in the Bible read of an "endless hell," of "endless death," of "endless misery," of "endless punishment," nor of "endless pain."

3. EVERLASTING. — The word everlasting occurs in the Old Testament sixty-one times. Eight times in Genesis, once in Exodus, twice in Leviticus, once in Numbers, once in Deuteronomy, once in 2 Samuel, once in 1 Chronicles, nine times in Psalms, twice in Proverbs, eighteen times in Isaiah, five times in Jeremiah, twice in Ezekiel, seven times in Daniel, once in Micah, and twice in Habakkuk. In the following books it is not found: Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 Samuel, 1 Kings, 2 Kings, 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Job.

The same word occurs in the New Testament twenty-six times. Four times in Matthew, twice in Luke, eight times in John, once in Acts, twice in Romans, once in Galatians, twice in 2 Thessalonians, twice in 1 Timothy, once in Hebrews, once in 2 Peter, once in Jude, and once in Revelation. It does not occur in Mark, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 Thessalonians 2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon, James, 1 Peter, nor in 1, 2, and 3 John.

4. ETERNAL. — This word is found but twice in the Old Testament. Isaiah 60 : 15, "Whereas thou (the Jews) hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." Deut. 33 : 27. Every one can see it is used here in a limited sense. The same word occurs in the New Testament forty-one times. Twice in Matthew, three times in Mark, twice in Luke, nine times in John, once in Acts, three times in Romans, three times in 2 Corinthians, twice in 1 Timothy, once in 2 Timothy, twice in Titus, five times in Hebrews, once in 1 Peter, six times in 1 John, and once in Jude.

The word is not found in 1 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, Philemon, James, 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, nor in Revelation.

5. FOREVER. — This word occurs in the Old Testament very nearly, if not just, three hundred and four times. Four times in Genesis, thirteen times in Exodus, fifteen times in Leviticus, eight times in Numbers, eleven times in Deuteronomy, four times in Joshua, twelve times in 1 Samuel, ten times in 2 Samuel, ten times in 1 Kings, twice in 2 Kings, nineteen times in 1 Chronicles, fifteen in 2 Chronicles, three times in Ezra, twice in Nehemiah, seven times in Job, one hundred and twelve times in Psalms, twice in Proverbs, four times in Ecclesiastes, thirteen times in Isaiah, twelve times in Jeremiah, three times in Lamentations, four times in Ezekiel, nine times in Daniel, once in Hosea, once in Joel, once in Obadiah, once in Jonah, three times in Micah, once in Zechariah, once in Amos, and once in Malachi. In the following books it is not found: Judges, Ruth, Esther, Song of Solomon, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai.

The same word occurs in the New Testament twenty-nine times. Twice in Matthew, once in Mark, twice in Luke, five times in John, four times in Romans, once in 2 Corinthians, five times in Hebrews, twice in 1 Peter, twice in 2 Peter, once in 1 John, once in 2 John, twice in Jude, and once in Philemon. It is not found in Acts, 1 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Timothy, Titus, James, 3 John, nor in Revelation.

6. NEVER. — In the Old Testament this word occurs just forty-nine times. In the New Testament it occurs thirty-seven times. It is not much relied on to prove the doctrine of endless punishment, and therefore we shall not be so particular in considering it. In the course of this chapter we shall give some quotations from the Scriptures, showing that it is sometimes, at least, used in a limited sense.

7 FOREVER AND EVER. — This phrase occurs in the Old Testament twenty-six times. Once in Exodus, twice in 1 Chronicles, three times in Daniel, once in Nehemiah, thirteen times in Psalms, twice in Isaiah, twice in Jeremiah, and twice in Micah. It does not occur in Genesis, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, nor in Malachi.

The same phrase occurs in the New Testament eighteen times. Once in Galatians, once in Philippians, once in 1 Timothy, once in 2 Timothy, twice in Hebrews, and twelve times in Revelation. It is not found in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Ephesians, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, Titus, Philemon, James, 1 and 2 Peter, 1, 2 and 3 John, nor in Jude.

The words eternal, everlasting, never, forever, and forever and ever, are generally in the Old Testament translated from the Hebrew olim. This word occurs in the Old Testament about four hundred and fifty-nine times. It is rendered once eternal, sixty times everlasting, two hundred and fifty-two times forever, four times ever, sixteen times never, fourteen times forevermore, twenty-two times forever and ever (where it occurs twice), once forever, even forever and ever (where it occurs three times), four times from everlasting to everlasting (where it occurs twice), twice world, once world without end, twenty-two times perpetual, twenty-six times old, of old, of old time, in old time, ever of old, six times ancient, ancient times, five times alway, always, twice never any more, once lasting, twice long, once long time, once continuance, once stripling, once young children, and once secret sins.

The words everlasting, eternal, forever, &c., in the New Testament, are translated from the Greek words aion and aionios. Aion occurs in the Greek Testament one hundred and twenty-eight times. Sixty-six times in the singular, and sixty-two times in the plural number. In the common English version it is rendered seventy-two times ever, twice eternal, thirty-six times world, seven times never, three times evermore, twice worlds, twice ages, once course, once world without end (where it occurs twice), and in two instances it is passed over without any word affixed as a translation to it. Aionios occurs seventy-one times. It is rendered once ever, forty-two times eternal, three times world, and twenty-five times everlasting.

When the Old Testament was translated from the Hebrew into the Greek language by the Seventy, the Hebrew word olim, when a noun, was rendered by the Greek word aion ; when an adjective, it was rendered by the word aionios. Olim, then, in Hebrew, and aion and aionios in Greek, are synonymous terms. The extent of duration, therefore, expressed by aion and aionios in the New Testament, must be determined by the scripture usage of olim in the Old.

We will now show that the words eternal, everlasting, forever, never, and forever and ever, translated from olim, are used in a limited sense.

To this list of passages, wherein the words everlasting, forever, &c., are obviously used in a limited sense, many more might be added. In these texts we see the word eternal applied to the excellency which God was to bestow upon the Jewish people. We see the word everlasting applied to God's covenant with the Jews; to the priesthood of Aaron; to the statutes of Moses; to the time the Jews were to possess the land of Canaan; to the mountains and hills; and to the doors of the Jewish temple. We see the word forever applied to the duration of a man's earthly existence; to the time a child was to abide in the temple; to the continuance of Gehazi's leprosy; to the duration of the life of David; to the duration of a king's life; to the duration of the earth; to the time the Jews were to possess the land of Canaan; to the time they were to dwell in Jerusalem; to the time a servant was to abide with his master; to the time Jerusalem was to remain a city; to the duration of the Jewish temple; to the laws and ordinances of Moses; to the time David was to be king over Israel; to the throne of Solomon; to the stones that were set up at Jordan; to the time the righteous were to inhabit the earth; and to the time Jonah was in the fish's belly. We find the phrase forever and ever applied to the hosts of heaven, or the sun, moon, and stars; to a writing contained in a book; to the smoke that went up from the burning land of Idumea; and to the time the Jews were to dwell in Judea. We find the word never applied to the time the fire was to burn on the Jewish altar; to the time the sword was to remain in the house of David; to God's covenant with the Jews; to the time the Jews should not experience shame; to the time the house of David was to reign over Israel; to the time the Jews were not to open their mouths because of their shame; to the time those who fell by death should remain in their fallen state; and to the time judgment was not executed.

But the external excellency of the Jews is taken from them; the law covenant is abolished; the priesthood of Aaron and his sons has ceased; the ordinances, and laws, and statutes of Moses are abrogated; the Jews have long since been dispossessed of the land of Canaan, have been driven from Judea, and God has brought upon them a reproach and a shame; the man to the duration of whose life the word forever was applied is dead; David is dead, and has ceased to reign over Israel; the throne of Solomon no longer exists; the Jewish temple is demolished, and Jerusalem has been overthrown, so that there is not left "one stone upon another;" the servants of the Jews have been freed from their masters; Gehazi is dead, and no one believes he carried his leprosy with him into the future world; the stones that were set up at Jordan have been removed, and the smoke that went up from the burning land of Idumea has ceased to ascend; the righteous do not inherit the earth endlessly, and no one believes that the mountains and hills, as such, are indestructible; the fire that burnt on the Jewish altar has long since ceased to burn; judgment has been executed; and no Christian believes that those who fall by death will never be awakened from their slumbers. Now, as these words are used in this limited sense in the Scriptures, why should it be supposed that they express endless duration when applied to punishment?

These words are applied to punishment in the Old Testament eight times only. In the New Testament they are applied to punishment twelve times. So that these words are applied to punishment only twenty times in the whole Bible. In the next Section we shall examine all the passages where they are thus applied.

SECTION III.

Examination of all the passages in the Bible where the words ETERNAL, EVERLASTING, FOREVER, and FOREVER AND EVER, are applied to punishment.

1. Job 20 : 5—7. The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish forever.

This passage needs no comment to show that it has no reference to punishment in a future world. It is only necessary to examine the connection in which it is found to see that it refers to temporal destruction. "Yet he shall perish forever, like his own dung; they which have seen him shall say, Where is he?..... His bones are full of the sins of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust."

2. Ps. 9 : 5. Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name forever and ever.

This and the text just considered, if we allow them to have reference to a future world, prove not the endless suffering or misery of the persons spoken of, but their absolute and entire annihilation. It is not said they should be endlessly miserable; on the contrary, in the text now under consideration, the punishment of the persons named is said to have been already accomplished. "Thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name," &c. Undoubtedly referring to the Canaanitish nations which God destroyed from off the face of the earth, so that their names should be known no more on earth forever. Indeed, the connection shows this. See the whole Psalm.

3. Isa. 33 : 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

The context of this passage shows that God was speaking of his temporal judgments on earth; and that these judgments are represented under the figure of fire. "The earth mourneth and languisheth; Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down; Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits. Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself. Ye shall conceive chaff; ye shall bring forth stubble your breath as fire shall devour you; and the people shall be as the burnings of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire. Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done; and ye that are near acknowledge my might." See verses 9—13. Then comes in the passage under consideration. Who then were to dwell with "everlasting burnings?" "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppression, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil." See verse 15. These, then, were to dwell amid the devouring fire of God's judgments, and dwell safely. They were not to be injured by those fires and judgments which made the "sinners in Zion afraid," and which surprised the hypocrites with "fearfulness." There is a possibility, then, of a person's dwelling with devouring fire, yea, with "everlasting burnings," in the scripture sense of these phrases, and being entirely unharmed and uninjured. We pity the man who can see in this text the least proof of the doctrine of endless punishment.

4. Jer. 17 : 4. For ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn forever.

The prophet is speaking of Judah, and the punishment of Judah. He does not say the anger of God should burn against them through the endless ages of eternity, nor in a future state of existence; on the contrary, the connection shows that this punishment was of a temporal nature. "And thou even thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not; for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn forever."

5. Jer. 23 : 40. And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten. Compare Jer 20 : 11.

Here, again, it is evident that the Jewish people are spoken of. God does not say they should suffer this reproach and shame in a future world, nor that they should be made endlessly miserable; nor does any Christian believe that the entire Jewish people are to suffer endless punishment. Few will dispute that this text relates to the temporal punishment of the Jews. The connection makes this perfectly plain. God, after having spoken of the great wickedness of the Jews, says, "Therefore I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence; and I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten." For the meaning of the phrase, "Presence of God," see Chapter XIV.

6. Mal. 1 : 4. The people against whom the Lord hath indignation forever.

Here, again, it is evident from the context that God's temporal judgments are referred to. It is not said the Lord will be indignant against these people, but "the Lord hath indignation" — that is, they were a people against whom, as a people or nation, the Lord had always been indignant. The people spoken of are the Edomites, who had been the enemies and persecutors of the Jews, for which God had overthrown or destroyed them. "Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them The border of wickedness, and The people against whom the Lord hath indignation forever." Further comment on this text is unnecessary.

7. Dan. 12 : 2. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

This text was once regarded by the great majority of Christians as proof, not only of punishment in a future world, but of the endless continuance of that punishment; but, by the great majority of intelligent Christians, this idea is now abandoned. We doubt whether any intelligent, respectable clergyman of any denomination would dare to hazard his reputation on the assertion that the text has any relation to the concerns of another world. If there is any such one, we are very certain he cannot be induced to manifest his sincerity by going before a public audience and defending such an opinion against the attacks of a respectable opponent. But there may be some who are honestly of the opinion just referred to; and for the benefit of such as may chance to read this book, we will give the text an examination.

The first question to be settled is, Is Daniel here speaking of an event which is yet future? If the view which has commonly been entertained of the text be correct, he certainly must be; for it has been supposed that he is speaking of the literal resurrection from death, and certainly this has not yet taken place. But it must be allowed that Daniel knew as much concerning the time for the fulfilment of his predictions as any person living at the present day can be supposed to know. His own testimony concerning the time, then, will not be disputed. Well, when then does Daniel say his prediction should be fulfilled? The twelfth chapter commences thus: — "And at that time." At what time? Evidently the time spoken of in the preceding chapter. Well, in the eleventh chapter, he speaks of the "abomination that maketh desolate." See verse 31. And Christ, in his discourse concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, contained in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, fixes upon that event as the time for the fulfilment of what Daniel had spoken concerning the abomination of desolation. "When ye (the disciples), therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains." See Matt. 24: 15, 16. Compare Luke 21: 20, 21, "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." In these passages our Lord addresses his disciples as if he expected they would live to see this "abomination of desolation;" and it is also plain that this "abomination of desolation" was the Roman army which destroyed Jerusalem. Again, Daniel, in the 11th, and also in the 12th chapter, speaks of the "time of the end." What end was this? "Evidently the end of the world," say some. We reply — Daniel says not a word in his whole book about the end of the world. The phrase "end of the world" does not occur in his writings. What end then was this, and when was it to take place? See Dan. 12: 4—7. "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever and ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, ALL THESE THINGS SHALL BE FINISHED." Our Lord, in the 24th chapter of Matthew, speaks of the same "end." "And ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet..... And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Both Daniel and Christ are here speaking, not of the end of the material world, but of the end of the Mosaic or legal dispensation; and this was brought to a close or end, finally and effectually, when God "accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people;" or, when the temple and holy city were demolished, and the Jews led captives among all nations. Once more. In the verse preceding the passage under consideration, Daniel says: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as there never was since there was a nation even to that same time." Our Lord quotes these very words, and applies them to the destruction of Jerusalem. "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." See Matt. 24: 21. But Daniel adds, "And at that time thy people shall be delivered every one that shall be found within the book." Our Lord, when speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, says, "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Accordingly, not one Christian perished in that destruction. All who were "found written in the book" of life were saved, i. e., delivered in that awful and tremendous calamity which came upon the Jews. It is plain, therefore, that both Daniel and Jesus apply the prediction contained in the 12th chapter of Daniel to the destruction of Jerusalem; and both of them considered it fulfilled at the time of, and in, that event. Those who apply it to a literal resurrection, or to the concerns of another world, or to any event which is yet future, must admit that both Jesus and Daniel were mistaken.

If this text relates to the literal resurrection, and teaches the punishment of a portion of mankind in a future world, one thing is certain: it is no proof of the doctrine of endless punishment. 'But," says the objector, "does it not say 'some shall awake to shame and everlasting contempt?'" Yes; but have we not shown that the word everlasting is frequently employed in the Scriptures in a limited sense? And have we not shown that it is even applied to punishment, when it is perfectly obvious that only a limited punishment is intended? Besides, how can it be believed that Daniel intended to teach here the doctrine of never-ending woe, pain and misery, and yet applied to this misery the comparatively light terms "shame and contempt?" Why, if he intended to teach this doctrine, did he not say, as those who believe this doctrine in our day would say, under the same circumstances, "Some shall awake to appear before God in judgment, and to be consigned to the torments of a never-ending hell?" or "Some shall awake to experience endless misery and undying agony?" Again, if Daniel refers here to the literal resurrection, why does he limit that resurrection to a certain number? He does not say "all that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," but "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." This certainly implies that all were not to awake, or that some would not awake. Upon the supposition that he refers to the literal resurrection, we see no way to account for this; but, if our view of it is correct, all this is perfectly plain. Once more. If Daniel here teaches the doctrine of endless punishment in a future state of existence, another thing is very certain: he is the only Old Testament writer who does teach it. If this text teaches it, it is the only text in the Old Testament that does teach any such thing. Now, is it reasonable to suppose that the Old Testament Scriptures were designed to teach so important a doctrine as this, and yet that it should not be mentioned but in one single book, and in only one single passage even in that book, and that book the twenty-seventh one of a collection of thirty-nine, and that passage in the very last chapter of that book? Can it be supposed that the Old Testament writers believed in such a doctrine, and yet that only one of them, and he the fourteenth in a list of twenty-eight, should say anything about it; and he only mention it once, and then in the very last chapter of his book? Certainly, these are absurdities so glaring that we greatly marvel that they should ever have been overlooked.

But it may be asked, "What, then, is meant by 'them which sleep in the dust of the earth?'" We answer: the terms sleep, dust, death, &c., are frequently employed in the Scriptures to express spiritual sloth, lethargy, indifference; moral and religious inactivity; insensibility to the claims of duty, and a feeling of security against the consequences of such things. See Job 42 : 6; Nahum 3 : 18; Psalms 44 : 25; Isa. 25 : 12, 26 : 5, 29 : 10, 47 : 1, 51 : 17, 52 : 2; 1 Cor. 15 : 34; 1 Tim. 5 : 6; Rev. 3 : 1. This text was spoken in reference to the Jewish people, who, at the time of the coming of the Messiah, were in a low, miserable, and degraded condition. They were morally and spiritually dead. The voice of Jesus was to rouse them from their slumbers. The judgments of God were to awaken them from their lethargy; and some — that is, the remnant that was to be saved, those whose names were found written in the book of life — were to come forth to the enjoyment of the blessings and privileges of the Messiah's reign; while others — that is, those whom God had given over to hardness of heart and unbelief — were to be aroused only to relapse, or fall back into a more miserable and degraded condition than before. For an explanation of the phrase "everlasting life," see Chapter XVI.

We will close the examination of this text with the following brief extract. "It is agreeable to fact, that, on the day of Pentecost, three thousand Jews awoke to the everlasting life imparted by the gospel, by believing in Jesus. Such, also, was the case with multitudes more of them, as the history of the Acts of the Apostles shows. Though the spirit of slumber had seized the Jewish nation, — though they had eyes, and saw not, and ears, but heard not, — yet the apostle declares that there was a remnant according to the election of grace. See Romans 11. This part awoke to everlasting life, or entered into the everlasting kingdom of Christ, and had peace and joy in believing. They heard the voice of the Son of God, and lived. See John 5 : 21, 25, and 28, 29. Compare Eph. 5 : 14. The rest slept on till the wrath of God came upon them to the uttermost. They all at last awoke, but it was to shame and everlasting contempt, in being dispersed among all nations, and they have become a by word and an hissing even unto this day. Jeremiah, in chap. 23 : 39, 40, predicted this very punishment, and calls it an 'everlasting reproach, and a perpetual shame.'" — See Balfour's Second Inquiry.

Our Lord, in John 5 : 28, 29, evidently has allusion to the same time, and to the same events. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." It has been supposed by many that this passage refers to the literal resurrection of mankind from natural death. But to this view of the text we oppose the following objections: 1. It is inconsistent with the general theory of those who advocate this opinion. They maintain that, subsequently to the general resurrection, there is to be a day of general judgment. But this text says not a word about a judgment after the resurrection spoken of. On the contrary, those who were in the graves were to come forth, some "to the resurrection of life," and some "to the resurrection of damnation." That is, they were to come forth to a state and condition to which they had been adjudged previously to the resurrection spoken of. 2. In those passages of the New Testament which obviously relate to the resurrection from natural death, nothing is said about a retribution to follow that resurrection. See fifteenth chap. of 1 Cor., and 1 Thess. 4 : 13—18. This is an important fact, and one which ought constantly to be borne in mind. 3. It is not said in this text that all who were in their graves were to come forth, but all who are in the graves. That is, as we have seen above, in the graves of sin, in a low and degraded condition, represented under the figure of their being dead, and in the burial-places of the dead. 4. The word here rendered graves is not hades, but it is a word which signifies tombs, sepulchres, or the literal burial-places of the dead. Now, whenever the resurrection of mankind from natural death is spoken of in the New Testament, it is spoken of as a resurrection from hades, or from the state of death. It is never spoken of as a resurrection from the tombs, sepulchres, or literal graves. 5. The wicked are frequently represented in the New Testament as being lost, dead, &c., when nothing more than moral death is intended. John 5 : 25, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." Luke 15 : 24, "For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found." Eph. 3 : 14, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." 1 Tim. 5 : 6, "But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." To be delivered from this state of moral death, is to experience a resurrection to life. Eph. 2 : 1, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." John 5 : 21, 24, "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." In the Old Testament, the wicked Jews are represented as not only dead, but as buried and in their graves. And their being raised from the degraded condition which they were in is represented under the figure of their coming up out of their graves. Ezek. 37 : 12, 13, 14, "O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I will place you in your own land." This language was spoken of the Jews at the time of their captivity in Babylon. The Jews, in the time of our Saviour, were placed in similar circumstances to those of their fathers, to whom the language of Ezekiel was applied. There can be no doubt that Jesus, in John 5 : 28, 29, had his eye on the passage in Daniel which we have just considered, and borrowed his language partly from that and partly from the passage in Ezekiel. If, therefore, the language of the New Testament is to be explained by the use of the same or similar language in the Old, then it must be perfectly plain that this passage in John has been generally misunderstood, and that it must be applied to the same time and events as the passage in Daniel.

We now come to those passages in the New Testament in which the terms everlasting, forever, &c., are applied to punishment. The first that presents itself is,

8. Matt. 18 : 8. Wherefore, if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee : it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than, having two hands, or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire.

This language was addressed by our Lord to his own immediate disciples. In the very outset of our examination of this text we inquire, What evidence is there that it has any reference to another world? Certainly there is not a particle of evidence of this kind. If it be asked, "How could the fire here spoken of be everlasting, unless it is to burn in eternity?" we answer by asking, How could the fire burn on the Jewish altar forever, unless it burns in eternity? How could the Jews hold the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, unless they possess it in eternity? And how could an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame be experienced by the Jews, unless they experience it in eternity? Again, how can the gospel of Christ be called the everlasting gospel, unless it will be preached in eternity? And how could the disciples of Christ be said to have everlasting life while living in this world? If the reader will consult Chapter X. of this book, "On the scripture usage of the term fire, and the phrases everlasting and eternal fire," he will see that the term fire is frequently employed to represent God's temporal judgments on men in this world, and that it is not once used to represent punishment in a future state of existence. The "everlasting fire" spoken of in this text is, in verse nine, called "hell or Gehenna fire." We have shown that the word Gehenna signifies the valley of Hinnom, and that this valley was used by the ancient prophets, and by Jesus Christ, as an emblem of that awful calamity, or judgment, which came on the unbelieving Jews. See Chapter I. of this book. Now, the obvious meaning of the text is this: that, if the disciples suffered anything whatever to draw them from their attachment to their Master, so that they renounced the faith of Jesus, and went back to the unbelieving Jews, they should be involved in that judgment which is here represented under the figure of fire, and which destroyed the lives of millions of the Jews, and doomed the rest to pine away in captivity and in despair. It was, therefore, better for the disciples to suffer some temporary deprivations, some losses and crosses, and inherit the blessings of the Messiah's reign, than to refuse to do this and be overwhelmed with the Jews in one common ruin.

9. Matt. 25: 41. Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.

The "everlasting fire" here is the same spoken of in the passage we have just been considering. The remarks on it there are equally applicable here. If it is asked, "What is meant here by the 'devil and his angels?'" we answer: We have shown, in Section II. of this book, on the "Bible doctrine concerning the devil," that the word devil is not used in the Bible to signify a fallen angel, nor a personal evil spirit; but that it is used to signify an enemy, an opposer, an accuser, &c. It is used here to signify the unbelieving Jews, who were the enemies of Christ, and opposers of his religion. The word angel signifies a messenger, either good or bad, and is just as applicable to human as spiritual beings. It is used here to signify those who were acting under the influence or direction of the unbelieving Jews. Such were their messengers, or emissaries. It probably signifies the Gentile converts to Judaism, who are acknowledged to have been even more violent, persecuting, and bitter in their opposition to the gospel, than the Jews themselves. But this will be made more plain in our remarks on the next passage.

10. Matt. 25 : 46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment : but the righteous into life eternal.

There is not a passage in the Bible that is more frequently quoted, or more confidently relied on for proof of the doctrine of endless punishment, than this. We suppose that, if the believers in this doctrine can be satisfied that it is not taught in this text, they will be willing to concede that it is not taught in the Bible. Let us, therefore, give it a fair, and careful, and candid investigation.

The text forms the conclusion of the celebrated parable of the sheep and goats. The first question to be considered is, Does this parable have any relation to the concerns of another world ? If this question is answered in the affirmative, then the following inferences are perfectly plain and undeniable : 1. Calvinism, or the doctrine of election and reprobation, is false. It is not said to those who were placed on the right hand, " Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world ; for God out of his mere good pleasure was pleased to elect you to the enjoyment of his favor and everlasting life." Nor is it said to those on the left hand, " Depart, ye cursed, &c., for God was pleased to pass you by, and foreordain you to everlasting wrath." No. Those on the right hand were placed there because their works or deeds had been good, and those on the left because their works had not been good. 2. It is equally undeniable that mankind are not to be admitted into heaven because they have exercised faith in the gospel while on earth, nor because they have been born again, nor because they have experienced any miraculous change of nature whatever, nor because they have made a profession of religion, nor because they have joined any particular church. Nor are mankind to be excluded from heaven, and to go to hell, because they have not been born again, nor exercised faith in the gospel, nor experienced a radical change of nature, nor made a profession of religion nor joined a particular church. No. They are to go to heaven because their works have been good. And some are to be excluded, and go to hell, because their works have not been good. 3. Mankind are not to be saved by grace, nor is immortality and endless enjoyment in a future state the gift of God; but these things are conferred as the reward of merit. The King says to those on the right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom, &c., for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat. I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me." And to those on the left hand he says, "Depart from me, ye cursed, &c., for I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick and in prison, and ye visited me not." And when those on the right hand inquire when they had done these good deeds, the King answers, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." When those on the left ask when they had neglected to perform these duties, the King answers, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Hence it is plain, that if this parable is to be applied to a future judgment, and the concerns of another world, it overthrows the whole scheme of gospel grace, and converts that which is the "gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast," into a reward which is an equivalent for our good works.

But that this parable has no relation to the concerns of another world, is evident from the following considerations:

1. The 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew evidently form one continued discourse, which was delivered by our Lord in answer to a question put to him by his disciples in relation to the time of his coming, and the destruction of Jerusalem. The 24th chapter commences thus: "And Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to show him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" The phrase "end of the world," here, is what has led many to conclude that our Lord blends with the subject of the destruction of Jerusalem the subject of the destruction of the material world. But this is a very great mistake. The word which is rendered world here, is not "kosmos," a word which signifies the material world, but "aion," a word which is expressive of duration, and not of substance, and which signifies an age or dispensation. Hence, Campbell, Clarke, Wakefield, Whitby, Thomas Newton, and others, render this phrase, "the conclusion of the age," "the conclusion of this state," "the end of this age," or "the end of this dispensation." For a further explanation of this phrase, see Chapter IX. of this work. The question of the disciples then was, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the Mosaic or legal dispensation?" But that the question of the disciples did not relate to the end of this material world, is further evident from the fact that neither Mark nor Luke, in their account of this discourse, say anything about the end of the world. This fact shows that they did not understand by this phrase what many understand by it in our day. Mark says, "And as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here! And Jesus answering, said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?" Mark 13 : 1, 3, 4. Luke says, "And as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said, As for these things which ye behold, the days will come in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?" Luke 21. 5—7. It is evident, from these quotations, that the disciples understood our Lord's discourse to relate solely and entirely to the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem. In both these chapters our Lord speaks particularly and frequently of his coming. He mentions it ten times in the 24th, and six times in the 25th. See Matt. 24: 3, 27, 30, 37, 39, 42, 46, 48, 50, and 25: 6, 10, 13, 19, 27, 31. But he gives no hint, or intimation whatever, that the coming mentioned in the 25th was any different in its nature, or was to take place at any different time than the coming spoken of in the 24th. Again, let it be borne in mind that the language of the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, to whatever it may relate, was addressed by our Lord to his own immediate disciples, and in the hearing of no other persons. Now, our Lord, in both chapters, addresses the disciples as if he expected they would be alive when the events predicted should take place. Matt. 24: 6, "And ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars." Verse 15, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation." Verse 20, "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter." Verse 23, "Then, if any man shall say unto you," &c. Verse 33, "So likewise ye when ye shall see all these things," &c. Matt. 25: 13, "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." Once more. The instructions which our Lord gives to his disciples are precisely the same in both chapters. In chapter 24: 42, 44, he insists upon the duty of the disciples to be watchful. "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." In the 25th chapter he insists upon the same duty. The 1st to the 12th verse contains the parable of the wise and foolish virgins. The design of this parable is clearly seen from the moral which Christ himself draws from it. See verse 13. "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." In chapter 24: 45, the duty of faithfulness is insisted on. "Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" The same duty is inculcated in the 25th chapter. The 14th to the 30th verse contains the parable of the talents. Every one can see that this parable was designed to enforce the same duty of faithfulness. And, again, the consequences which our Lord states would follow according as the disciples were watchful and faithful, or not, are the same in both chapters. In chapter 24, from the 46th to the 51st verse, these consequences are clearly stated. "Blessed is that servant whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." In the 25th chapter, from the 28th to the 30th verse, the same consequences are stated. "Take, therefore, the talent from him (the slothful servant), and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." From the similarity of the instructions contained in both chapters, and the peculiarity of the style in the 25th, it is evident that what is contained in the 24th is put into a parabolic form in the 25th, and that the latter was designed to illustrate and enforce the same truths that are contained in the former. Lastly, that these two chapters form one connected discourse upon the same subject, is further evident from the fact that the 25th chapter commences with the word then. The word then refers to something which had been previously stated. "Then" — when? What other time could this refer to but the period which is clearly stated in the 24th chapter? It is pretty generally acknowledged, at the present day, that the whole of the 24th chapter relates to the destruction of Jerusalem. If this be true, it clearly follows that the word then, with which the 25th chapter commences, shows conclusively that all that is contained in the 25th was to be fulfilled when Jerusalem should be destroyed.

2. Another fact which shows that the parable of the sheep and goats has no relation to another world is, that not one word is said in the parable, nor in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, about a resurrection. Now, it is thought by those who apply it to another world, that it relates to a judgment to take place in another world, and that this judgment is to take place immediately after the resurrection. How, then, is it to be accounted for that Christ, throughout his whole discourse, was entirely silent respecting the resurrection?

3. It is also a fact, that not one word is said in this parable, nor in the whole discourse with which it is connected, about a judgment in another world. Christ, to be sure, speaks about the gathering of the nations before him, but he does not say this gathering would take place after death, nor after the resurrection, nor in a future world. On the contrary, he affirms that it was to take place at the time of his coming. What time this was to be we shall see presently.

4. Another important fact is, that although Mark and Luke have recorded the substance of what is contained in the 24th chapter, yet neither of them have recorded what is contained in the 25th. This shows that in their estimation the 25th chapter was a mere amplification of the same subject that is treated upon in the 24th. How can it be supposed, now, that Mark and Luke understood the 24th chapter to be on the subject of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the 25th on the subject of a future general judgment, to be followed by the endless happiness of a portion of mankind, and the endless misery of the rest; and yet, that they should record the former and not the latter? Can it be supposed, we ask, that they could attach so much importance to a subject of such comparatively little importance as the one, and none at all to a subject of such vast, such infinite importance, as the other? Such a supposition is absolutely inadmissible.

Let us now more particularly examine the parable itself, and see if there is anything contained in it which would lead us to suppose that it refers to anything beyond the present world. The parable, then, commences thus: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations," &c From this it is evident that everything contained in the parable was to take place "when the Son of Man should come in his glory." Well, when was this coming to take place? This is an important question; because on the answer to it depends the application of the whole parable. We presume it will not be disputed that Jesus knew as much about the time when he should make his appearance as any other person. Let us, then, appeal to his own testimony on this point. We have shown that the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew form one connected discourse, and that the coming of Christ is frequently spoken of in both chapters. Well, is there anything said in either of these chapters respecting the time when this coming was to be? We answer, that although Jesus acknowledges that the precise day and hour were known to God only (see Matt. 24: 36, Mark 13: 32), yet he did know that it would take place within a certain period of time, and that period is clearly stated in both chapters. We have already shown that Christ addresses his disciples, in both chapters, as if his coming was to take place during their natural lives. But in the 24th chapter there is something even more definite than this. Our Lord says (see from the 29th to the 34th verses), "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (the days just preceding the destruction of Jerusalem) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the SON OF MAN COMING in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye (the disciples) shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till ALL THESE THINGS be fulfilled." Compare Mark 13: 24—30, "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the SON OF MAN COMING in the clouds, with great power and glory. And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near: so ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOORS. Verily I say unto you, That this generation shall not pass till ALL THESE THINGS be done." See also Luke 21: 25—32, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the SON OF MAN COMING in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your (the disciples) heads; for your redemption (from the persecutions and trials which they had endured) draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable: Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when YE see these things come to pass, know ye that the KINGDOM OF GOD is nigh at hand." From this last quotation we learn that the "coming of the Son of Man," and the "coming of the kingdom of God," are synonymous expressions. And the uniform testimony of the New Testament is, that although the kingdom of God, or Gospel dispensation, commenced when Christ commenced his ministry, yet it was not permanently established until Christ's coming at the destruction of Jerusalem, at which time the power of the holy people was scattered, and the children of the kingdom obtained rest from the persecutions which they had endured from the cruelty of this persecuting power. Hence, the coming of the Son of Man is frequently connected with the coming of the kingdom of God. See Matt. 16: 27, 28, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they SEE THE SON OF MAN COMING IN HIS KINGDOM." Mark 8: 38; 9: 1, "Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels. And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death till they have seen the KINGDOM OF GOD COME with POWER." Luke 9: 26, 27, "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels. But I tell you of a truth, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they SEE THE KINGDOM OF GOD." For further testimony on this subject, see Chapter VII.

The passages which we have quoted, if they mean anything at all, establish the fact, beyond all controversy or cavil, that the second coming of Christ was to take place at the destruction of Jerusalem; and at that time the kingdom of God was to come with power; the preachers and professors of Christ's Gospel to be rewarded, every man according to his works; and the unbelieving and persecuting Jews to be punished as their crimes and iniquities deserved. He who denies this, must deny the positive and direct testimony of Jesus himself; and if he contends that no such coming of Christ took place at that time, he must also adopt the necessary conclusion, namely, that Jesus was one of the greatest impostors, or foolish fanatics, the world ever saw. If no such coming took place at the time specified, then our Lord either intended to deceive his disciples, or was himself deceived. Bear in mind, then, reader, that what is contained in this parable was to be fulfilled at the time of the coming of the Son of Man. And remember that we have proved, by the explicit testimony of Christ himself, that that coming was to take place at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, and during the lifetime of some of his own immediate disciples. You cannot fail now to see the true meaning and application of the parable. The design of the parable was twofold 1. To prefigure the separation which would take place between the true and false professors of Christ's religion, when he should come in judgment upon the Jewish people. Then those who had been faithful in their Master's cause, who had been watchful, and on the look-out for the signs, which Christ predicted would precede that judgment; those who had practised the religion they professed, fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the sick, &c., would be accounted worthy to escape those calamities which were coming upon the earth, and to inherit the kingdom of God, or the blessings of the gospel dispensation. Whereas, those who had been unfaithful, who had not improved their talents, had been hypocritical in their profession of the gospel, and had neglected to be on the watch, would be taken by surprise; the Son of Man would come when they looked not for him, and they would be overwhelmed with the Jews in one common ruin. Accordingly, when the faithful Christians saw the approaching destruction, they fled from the place of danger, were gathered into the city and country of Pella, a mountainous region beyond the river Jordan, and were saved; while upon the unfaithful Christians and ungodly Jews the wrath of God came to the uttermost. This separation is represented in the parable under the figure of separating sheep from goats. In the following parables the same thing is represented by different figures. Matt. 3: 12, "Whose fan is in his hand, and he (Christ) will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." [For the meaning of the phrase "unquenchable fire," see Section X.] Matt. 13: 24—30, "Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field; but while men slept, his enemy came, and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence, then, hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay; lest, while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest; and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn." Our Lord, in his own explanation of this parable, fixes the time for its fulfilment at the end of the age. Matt. 13: 37—43, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world (kosmos); the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one [the word 'one' here is supplied by the translators]; the enemy that sowed them is the devil [for the meaning of the word 'devil' see Chapter II.]; the harvest is the end of the world (aion) [for the meaning of the phrase 'end of the world' see Chapter IX.]; and the reapers are the angels (that is, the messengers of the gospel). As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world (aion). The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire [for the meaning of the phrase 'furnace of fire' see Chapter XII.]: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13 : 47—50, "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind : which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and set down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world (aion); the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire : there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." But again. 2. This parable was designed to represent or prefigure the separation which took place between the Jews and Gentiles. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, &c., then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory : and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Separate them — what ? Why, evidently, the nations that were to be gathered before him. Now, does any man believe that a separation of nations will take place at a future day of judgment in eternity ? Certainly not. Then this can have no reference to such a judgment; for the separation here spoken of is a separation of nations, and not of individuals. Well, what will the Son of Man do with the nations thus separated from each other ? "And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." Verse 33. No one will dispute that to be placed at the right hand of God signifies to be brought into the enjoyment of his favor and blessings; and that to be placed at his left hand signifies to be brought under his displeasure, and to be deprived of his blessings and favor. Now, the Jews had long been the peculiar and favored people of God : "to them pertained the law, and the adoption, and the covenant, and the promises;" and to them "were committed the oracles of God." But the Gentiles had long been "without hope and without God in the world." But a change was now to take place. God's ancient covenant people were to be deprived of their blessings and privileges, to incur the censure and condemnation of High Heaven, to experience His wrath and curse, and to be banished from their country, their firesides, and their homes. On the other hand, the Gentiles were to be converted to the gospel, embrace it in its fulness, be "delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son;" they were to come into the possession of the blessings and privileges of the gospel, inherit everlasting life, and come into the possession of "the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world." All this had been clearly foretold by Christ before. On one occasion, when addressing the Jews, he says, Matt. 8: 11, 12, "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east, and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven: but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Again, Matt. 21: 43, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." The same thing is spoken of in Acts 13: 44—47, "And the next Sabbath-day came almost the whole city (of Antioch) together to hear the word of God. But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, LO, WE TURN TO THE GENTILES: for so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth." And Paul says of these very Jews, Rom. 11: 7—10, "What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded; (according as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear) unto this day. And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompense unto them: let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always." Of the Gentiles Paul says, Eph. 2: 11—19, and 3: 1—8, "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants, having no hope, and without God in the world: but now, in Christ Jesus, ye, who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby; and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them which were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." "For this cause I, Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, as I wrote afore in few words; whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge of the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God, given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the GENTILES the unsearchable riches of Christ." In the eleventh chapter of Romans, Paul tells the Gentiles, that through the fall of the Jews salvation came to the Gentiles, that the diminishing of the Jews was the riches of the Gentiles, that the Jews were the enemies of the gospel for the sake of the Gentiles, and that through the unbelief of the Jews salvation had come to the Gentiles. Hence, he says to them, "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off. And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again."

The persons, then, who were to go away into everlasting punishment were the unbelieving Jews and the false professors of Christ's religion. These are represented under the figure of goats, chaff, tares, and bad fishes. They are also called foolish virgins, evil servants, and wicked and slothful servants. Those who were to go into life eternal were the Gentiles and the faithful disciples of Christ. They are represented under the figure of sheep, wheat, and good fishes. They are also called wise virgins, and faithful serv ants . But, it may be asked, "What everlasting punishment was to be experienced by the first class?" We answer, they were to go into everlasting fire, — that is, experience those judgments of God which we have shown are represented under the figure of fire. They were to have their portion with hypocrites, experience weeping and gnashing of teeth, be shut out of the marriage-feast, have their talents taken from them, be placed on the left hand of God, be cast into outer darkness, be overwhelmed in the approaching destruction, experience trouble and tribulation such as had never been before, nor ever should be again. They were to be exiled from their homes, banished from their country, carried captives among all nations, become a by-word and an hissing, and experience an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame. The tremendous and awful judgment which is represented by these figures the Jews experienced, and have been experiencing, for a period of one thousand eight hundred years. How much longer it is to continue God only knows; but, according to the scripture usage and meaning of the word everlasting, it has continued now sufficiently long to justify the application of that term to the punishment which they have endured. They have suffered this punishment now longer than they possessed the land of Canaan, longer than the Levitical priesthood endured, and longer than the everlasting covenant continued. But that their punishment is not to be absolutely endless in duration, is evident from the fact that Paul teaches the eventual salvation of the entire Jewish race. Rom. 11: 25—32, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery (lest ye should be wise in your own conceits), that blindness in part [not total blindness] is happened to Israel, until [here is a limitation of it] the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief; even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them ALL in UNBELIEF, that he might have MERCY upon ALL." Again, that this punishment is not strictly endless in duration is further evident from the fact, that the word kolasis, rendered punishment in this text, signifies correction for the benefit of the offender. Donnegan defines it thus: "Kolasis, the act of clipping or pruning — generally, restriction, restraint, reproof check, chastisement." See "Donnegan's Greek and English Lexicon," p. 767. In this, Parkhurst, Dr. Belsham, Simpson, and the Editors of the "Improved Version," agree. This corresponds with the nature of punishment as it is represented in the Bible. See Heb. 12 : 6—11.

If it is asked, "What eternal life was to be experienced by the righteous?" — we answer, they were to experience salvation from the impending ruin; to be gathered among the elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other; to be made rulers over all the Master's goods; to go in with the Bridegroom to the marriage; to enter into the joy of their Lord; to be placed on the right hand of God; and to inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. The word eternal, here applied to the life enjoyed by the believer under the Gospel dispensation, is used not to signify or express the duration of that life, but the nature, the quality, or the kind, of it. This life is called eternal for five reasons. 1. To distinguish it from the life enjoyed by those living under the Law or Legal dispensation. That is never called eternal or everlasting life. The phrase, "everlasting life," does not occur but once in the Old Testament, and is then used with reference to the life imparted by the Gospel. 2. Because those who are in the possession of this life enjoy it continually, unceasingly, uninterruptedly, and perpetually. One definition of the word here rendered eternal, is perpetual. 3. Because it is a life to be enjoyed in the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ." Christ's kingdom is called everlasting, yet it is to come to an end. Paul teaches that Christ shall "deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, and he himself become subject to him that did put all things under him." See 1 Cor. 15 : 24—28. 4. Because it is a life to be enjoyed under the dispensation of the "everlasting Gospel." The Gospel is called everlasting, yet no one supposes it will be preached throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. 5. Because it is a life imparted by that Gospel which brings "life and immortality to light." Hence, the believer in this Gospel lives in the constant enjoyment of a hope "full of immortality," and in the perpetual anticipation of an inheritance "incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." Bear in mind, reader, that the question is not, How has this subject been understood in ages past? How was it understood by the Apostolic and Christian fathers? How was it understood by John Calvin, Martin Luther, or John Wesley? How was it understood by the different sects and denominations in Christendom? — nor, How is it understood by the learned doctors of the church in our day? No, no, these questions are of no importance whatever, except to gratify an idle curiosity. The all-absorbing question is, How did Christ understand it? and What is the true meaning and application of the parable of the sheep and goats? Neither is the question, What has been understood, and what do we understand, by the terms eternal, everlasting, &c.? No, the question is, What are these terms used to signify in the Bible? If we will allow Christ to define his own terms, and explain his own language, and at the same time acknowledge him to be correct in such definition and explanation, the subject is perfectly clear and plain. "Hear ye him," then. John 17 : 3, "And this IS LIFE ETERNAL, that they might KNOW THEE, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." John 6 : 54, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, HATH ETERNAL LIFE, and I will raise him up at the last day." [For meaning of the phrase "last day," see Chapter VIII.] John 5 : 24, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, HATH EVERLASTING LIFE."

All important objections to the view which we have presented of this subject have been answered as we passed along, except three. Those three will now be stated and replied to.

1. It is objected, that the view which we have advocated respecting the time of Christ's coming is contrary to fact, inasmuch as no personal appearing of Christ took place at the destruction of Jerusalem. To this we reply, that we have shown, by the testimony of Jesus himself, that there was to be a coming of the Son of Man at that time. Now, whether this was to be a personal coming, or whether Christ was to make a visible, personal appearance, or not, depends altogether upon the fact whether he did, or did not, appear in such manner at that time. If we admit that Jesus was what he claimed to be, then his authority is indisputable on this point. If, therefore, no personal appearance of Christ took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, we have a right to conclude that no such coming was had reference to. That there was a visible appearance of Christ at that time, we have no proof; that there was not is very probable, and, therefore, we conclude no such coming was alluded to. If it be asked, "What kind of coming then was alluded to?"—we answer, it was a coming in power and glory, a manifestation of Christ's power in the destruction of his enemies, and the salvation of the Christian believers. And here we remark that any particular or special manifestation of God's power, either in saving or punishing mankind, is called in the Scriptures a coming of God. Ex. 19: 9, "And the Lord said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud." Ex. 20: 24, "I (God) will come unto thee (Moses), and bless thee." Ps. 50: 3, "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." Isa. 35: 4, "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you." Isa. 40: 10, "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. 66: 15, "For behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire." Hosea 6: 3, "And he (God) shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth." Hosea 10: 12, "For it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you." Mal. 4: 6, "And he (Elijah) shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, &c., lest I (God) come and smite the earth with a curse." No one supposes that the comings spoken of in these texts allude to a personal, visible appearance of God, but only to a manifestation of his power. Christ, in speaking of his special interference in rewarding his faithful followers, and punishing the rebellious Jews, adopts the figurative language of the prophets, and represents it in the same light that they represent the manifestations of God's goodness and displeasure under the Legal dispensation. If we carefully notice the language which Christ employs when speaking of his coming, we shall see that he did not mean to be understood that it was to be a visible, personal appearance. Matt. 24: 23—28, "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not; for there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; Behold, he is in the secret chamber, believe it not." This language was evidently designed to caution the disciples against supposing that he was to appear personally and visibly at that time. But he adds, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be." From this we learn that his coming was to be sudden, and to some, at least, unexpected; and as the reflection of the lightning might be seen without seeing the lightning itself; so might Christ's power and glory be manifested and seen without beholding his person. He immediately adds, "For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." It is generally conceded, that by the carcass here is meant the Jewish people, and by the eagles, the ensigns of the Roman army. This, then, is a plain declaration that his coming consisted in bringing upon Jerusalem the Roman army, which should destroy the Jews, and work deliverance for the Christians from their persecuting power. Again, Christ, in Mark 8: 38, and 9: 1, expressly calls his coming, a coming in the "glory of his Father." No one would infer from this, that God was personally to appear at that time. Well, in Luke 9: 26. 27, he expressly calls it a coming in "his own glory." "When he cometh in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels," &c. Now, as this coming was to be a manifestation of the power and glory of God, and not a visible appearance of God; so, neither was it to be a personal or visible appearance of Christ, but only a manifestation of his power and glory in the manner just related.

2. It is objected that, "At the coming of Christ, spoken of in this parable, he was to be attended by ALL THE HOLY ANGELS; but no such appearance of the angels took place at the destruction of Jerusalem." Whether there was to be a real appearance of angels at the coming of Christ, spoken of here, depends altogether upon what kind of angels was referred to. The word angel has a variety of significations, and is applied in a variety of ways in the Bible. It signifies a messenger or agent, and is applied to both good and bad beings. It is applied to human and super-human beings, also to inanimate objects. This latter application it has in 2 Cor. 12 : 7, 8. It is applied to human beings in the following texts : — Matt. 3 : 1, and 11 : 10; Mark 1 : 2; Luke 7 : 24, and 9 : 52; Phil. 2 : 25; 2 Cor. 8 : 23; James 2 : 25; Rev. 2 : 1, 18, and 3 : 1, 7, 14. In these passages we find the word applied to John the Baptist; to two of his disciples who were sent to Jesus to inquire whether he was the Messiah or not; to the disciples of Christ, who were sent into a city of Samaria to prepare a place for him; to Epaphroditus, the companion of Paul; an angel or messenger to the church at Philippi; to the brethren of Paul, who were the messengers of the churches; to the spies who were sent to spy out the land of Canaan; and to the ministers of the seven churches of Asia. In Rev. 15 : 8, and 16 : 1, it is applied to those whom God employs to execute his vengeance. Now, whether Jesus, in this parable, by the word angels, refers to human or super-human beings, must, we think, be considered doubtful. Hence, there are different opinions about it, some inclining to one opinion, some to the other. If we allow that he referred to human beings, then the question arises, What class of human beings were referred to? He might have referred to the messengers of the Gospel — all who should be alive at the time of his coming; or to the Roman armies, which were the executors of God's vengeance upon the Jewish nation. The word angels occurs once in this discourse concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, besides in this parable, and there it undoubtedly signifies the messengers of the Gospel. Matt. 24 : 31, "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." The same angels might have been referred to in this parable. If we suppose Jesus to allude to the Roman armies, then it may be asked, "How could these messengers be called holy?" To this it has been replied that, "they are called holy for the same reason that the people of Israel, the land in which they lived, the temple in which they worshipped, the ministers of the temple, the sacrifices they offered, the vessels and dishes made use of in the temple service, the garments of the priests, and, indeed, all things connected with the religion and state of the Jewish people, are called holy." Again, it has been very truly said, that "the term holy in scripture does not always refer to moral character, but is frequently applied to persons and things, who, or which, are set apart for particular purposes. Hence, the Roman armies being chosen or selected by Providence, to execute punishment on the Jewish nation, might with propriety be called God's holy agents, messengers, or angels, to execute his purposes." Once more. By comparing Matt. 22: 1—7, and 13 : 36—42, it will be seen that what in one parable is represented as to be done by angels, is in the other represented as to be done by armies. In the one, the Son of Man was to send forth his armies and destroy those murderers (the Jews), and burn up their city ; in the other, he was to send forth his angels, who were to sever the wicked from among the just, and cast out the wicked into a furnace of fire. From the above facts, we think it quite possible that the word angels in this place might have been used with reference to the Roman armies. But again. Christ might have alluded to his own immediate disciples. See Matt. 19 : 28, "Ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Compare this with the commencement of the parable under consideration. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory." From this it is plain, that, when Christ should sit on the throne of his glory, his disciples were also to sit on twelve thrones. Well, when was this to be ? When the Son of Man should "come in his glory." We have shown that this coming took place at the destruction of Jerusalem. This, then, was the time when his disciples were to sit on twelve thrones. But what throne of Christ's glory was this ? We answer, it was not literal, but figurative ; it was not temporal, but spiritual. No man, we think, will contend that either Christ's throne, or the thrones of his disciples, were literal thrones. What other throne, then, could be referred to, but the throne of Christ's mediatorial kingdom, under which he rules, governs, and judges men, by the power and influence of the truth, or Gospel, which he preached ? And, as the same truth was proclaimed by his disciples, and left upon record by them, hence, they are associated with Christ in the moral government of the world ; all which is represented under the figure of their sitting on thrones, and exercising power, rule, and authority among men. But it may be asked, "Were all the twelve disciples present at the destruction of Jerusalem ?" We answer, we have no proof that they were ; nor was it any more necessary that they should be, than it was that Christ should be there personally. At that time the kingdom of God came with power; the Legal dispensation passed away; the Gospel dispensation became permanently established in the earth; and the reign of Christ and his disciples commenced. This reign will continue until it extends over both Jews and Gentiles; until all are gathered into one fold; until Christ has "put down all rule, and all authority, and power." If we allow that Christ, in this parable, by the word angels refers to super-human beings, the objection we are considering is of no force; for we have shown that Christ's coming was not to be personal; and, as there was to be no personal appearance of Jesus Christ himself at that time, so neither was there to be a personal appearance of angels. Besides, we have shown that it was quite possible that all that was meant when Christ is represented as being attended by angels at his coming was that he was to come in the glory of the angels. See Luke 9: 26. "When he cometh in his own glory, and in his Father's, and OF THE HOLY ANGELS."

3. It is objected, that, "At the coming of Christ, all nations were to be gathered before him; but no such gathering of the nations took place at the destruction of Jerusalem." To this we reply, as we have replied to some other objections, that we have proved by the testimony of Jesus himself that he was to come during the lifetime of some of his own disciples, before the generation in which he lived passed away, and at the time of the overthrow of Jerusalem. We have also shown that at that time he was to reward and punish the professed believers in his Gospel according to their works, punish the rebellious Jews, and receive the Gentiles into the favor of God. It was at this very time that he was to sit upon the throne of his glory, and all nations were to be gathered before him. Now, the sense of the phrase "all nations" must be determined by the fact whether every individual of all nations was gathered before him or not. If every individual of all nations was not gathered before him at that time, then we have a right to conclude that no such gathering was intended or meant. Perhaps the objector may not be aware of it, but the fact is, this objection weighs as heavily against the authenticity of the Scriptures, and the truth of Christ's claims to be a true prophet of God, as it does against the views which we have advocated. On no other view of the subject than that which admits that all which Christ predicted concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, and the events which were to transpire at that time, was fulfilled, can the inspiration of Jesus and the authenticity of the New Testament be defended. If there was no gathering of the nations at the destruction of Jerusalem in the sense intended by our Lord, then, as his prediction was not fulfilled, as his prophecy has failed, the conclusion is irresistible that he was an impostor, or was deceived himself. Let us, then, seek for the true sense of the expression, "and before him shall be gathered all nations." From the fact that Jesus was not to make a personal appearance at the destruction of Jerusalem, we conclude that the "all nations" spoken of were not to be personally and literally gathered before him. And from the fact that every individual of all nations was not gathered before him at that time, we conclude that no such gathering was intended. The phrase, "all nations," occurs twice in the discourse of which the parable of the sheep and goats forms a part, besides in the parable itself. The sense of the phrase in those instances will determine its meaning in the parable. Matt. 24: 9, "And ye (the disciples) shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." Matt. 24: 14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." We have shown that the end spoken of here was the end of the Jewish age or Legal dispensation, and that the Legal covenant was abolished and ended at the destruction of Jerusalem. Before this time, then, the Gospel was to be preached to all nations. But, we ask, was it preached to every individual of all nations? It is true the apostle tells us that the sound of the Gospel had gone out into all the earth, and the words of the apostles to the ends of the world. He also tells us that the Gospel had been preached to every creature under heaven. See Romans 10: 18; Col. 1: 23. But he could mean no more by this than that there had been a general proclamation of the Gospel, or that it had been preached throughout the then known world. Or, perhaps, more properly his meaning is that the Gospel had been preached throughout the Roman empire, including, of course, Judea, as Judea was then a province of that empire. The Roman empire, as it extended over all the then known world, was called the whole world. See Luke 2: 1; Mark 13: 10; Rom. 1: 8. No one supposes that the Gospel was preached to every individual of all the nations on the globe previous to the destruction of Jerusalem; and we, therefore, conclude that the phrase all nations, in this place, does not signify every individual of all nations. Again, were the disciples of our Lord hated by every individual of all nations of the earth? No; thousands never heard of their names; and of those who had heard of them, of those who had seen and heard them proclaim the Gospel, thousands loved them as they loved the apple of their eye. Now, he who contends for a literal gathering of every individual of all nations before the Son of Man at the destruction of Jerusalem, must also contend that the Gospel was preached to every individual of all nations, and that the disciples were hated of every individual of all nations, previous to that event; all of which is contrary to fact. If it be asked, "What all nations, then, were to be gathered before the Son of Man at that time?" — we answer, the same all nations to whom the Gospel was to be preached before the destruction of Jerusalem, and the same all nations who were to hate the disciples of Christ. Well, did such a gathering take place at the destruction of Jerusalem? We answer, Yes. Titus, the Roman general, with his army, invested the city of Jerusalem at a time when the Jews had assembled there to celebrate the feast of the Passover; and multitudes of the Jews, together with vast numbers of the proselytes to Judaism from the different heathen nations, were gathered there to partake of this great national and annual feast. About three millions of people were congregated in the city, and both Jews and Gentiles were represented there. In the sense, then, that Jesus intended, there was a gathering of the nations before him at the destruction of Jerusalem. His prediction concerning it was as literally fulfilled as some similar predictions contained in the Old Testament. See Jer. 3: 19, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem THE THRONE OF THE LORD: and ALL THE NATIONS shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem." Zech. 14: 1, 2, "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather ALL NATIONS against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." These passages need no comment. They show what is the evident meaning of the phrase "all nations," and in what sense we are to understand our Lord when he says, that "before him should be gathered all nations." We have been thus particular in our examination of the text under consideration because our Lord's discourse, of which it forms a part, has been very generally misunderstood; and because a correct understanding of this discourse is absolutely necessary to a correct understanding of the New Testament scriptures. This discourse may be said to be a key to unlock the whole New Testament. Reader, the subject is before you; read, consider, and reflect.

The next passage which presents itself for our consideration, is 11. Mark 3 : 29. But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation.

For an exposition of this text, see "On the Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost," Chapter XIX.

12. 2 Thess. 1 : 9. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

Any person who will carefully examine this text, will see that the persons to be punished, the time, and place, and nature, of the punishment, are precisely the same as in Matt. 25 : 46, which we have just considered. The first question to be considered is, Who were to be punished with everlasting destruction? The context shows that they were those who "knew not God, and obeyed not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ;" or those that troubled the Thessalonian Christians. See verses 6 and 8. But who troubled the Thessalonian Christians? We answer, they were troubled, first, by their own countrymen. See 1 Thess. 1 : 14, "For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus; for ye (the Thessalonians) also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews." But, second, they were troubled by the Jews. See 1 Thess. 1 : 15, "Who (the Jews) both killed the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and have persecuted us." See, also, Acts 17 : 1—8, "Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews. And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures; opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ. And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas, and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. But the Jews which believed not, filled with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also, whom Jason hath received; and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus. And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things." See, also, Acts 17: 13, "But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people." The next question is, When were they to be punished with everlasting destruction? "When the Lord Jesus should be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire." See verses 7 and 8. But when was the Lord Jesus to be revealed from heaven? See, on this subject, "On the Second Coming of Christ," Section VII. See, also, on Matt. 25: 46, above. It is there shown that this coming took place at the destruction of Jerusalem. This, then, was the time when the punishment spoken of in the text was to commence. This is further evident from what is said should take place when the Lord Jesus should be revealed from heaven. At that time he was to "take vengeance on them that knew not God," &c. Compare this with John 16: 3, "They (the Jews) have not known the Father nor me." See, also, the declaration of our Lord, when speaking on the subject of the destruction of Jerusalem. Luke 21: 22, "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." Again, in 1 Thess. 1: 6, Paul says, "It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you." Compare this with Matt. 24: 21, "For then (at the destruction of Jerusalem) shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." Now, those who contend that a greater tribulation than this awaits the unbelieving Jews who persecuted the Thessalonian Christians, must of course contradict the direct and positive testimony of Jesus himself. That we have fixed upon the precise time when the Lord

Jesus was to be revealed from heaven, and when the punishment spoken of in the text was to be inflicted, is still further evident from what is said in verse 7. "And to you who are troubled, rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed," &c. Not only were those who troubled the Thessalonians to be punished with everlasting destruction when the Lord Jesus should be revealed, but the persecuted Thessalonians were to obtain rest at that time. Rest from what? Why, plainly from the persecutions which they had endured. Now, those who contend that this text relates to a judgment day in eternity, must also contend that the Thessalonians were not to obtain rest until that time. But this is contrary to fact. For if they obtained no other rest, they have long since found rest "where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest;" viz., in their graves. But it may be asked, "Did the Thessalonians obtain rest from their persecutions when the Jews were destroyed?" We answer, they did. The power of the persecuting Jews being at that time overthrown, the Christian churches enjoyed a long season of uninterrupted peace and rest. Hence, our Saviour, when addressing his disciples on this very subject, says, Luke 21 : 28, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." But that this text has no reference to a future state of existence, is further evident from the following facts: 1. Paul does not say that the persecuting Jews were to be punished with everlasting destruction after death, nor in a future state of existence, nor in another world. 2. Nothing is said in the text, nor in the whole connection, about a resurrection from the dead. 3. Not one word is said, either in the text or context, about a general judgment. 4. The whole connection shows that Paul expected that what he predicted here would take place during the natural lives of some of the persons whom he addressed. But it may be asked, "What is meant by the Lord Jesus being 'revealed from heaven in flaming fire?'" On this subject, see Chapter X. It is there shown that the term fire is frequently employed in the Scriptures as a figure of God's temporal judgments, and is not once used to signify punishment in another world. Again, it may be asked, "What is meant by everlasting destruction 'from the presence of the Lord?'" This expression is rather ambiguous; and hence, some understand it to signify that the everlasting destruction spoken of was to come from the Lord. Others, that the everlasting destruction consisted in being banished from the presence of the Lord. In either case it can make no difference. If the first opinion is the true one, then it signifies that the punishment spoken of was to come from God. If the latter, then this punishment consisted in being banished, in some sense, from the presence of God. Well, "What sense was this?" On this subject, see Chapter XIV. It is there shown that this banishment of the Jews from the presence of God consisted in their being driven from the land of Judea, from the city of Jerusalem, and from the holy temple, where God's presence was supposed particularly to dwell. Once more. It may be asked, "What everlasting destruction was it which the Jews were to suffer?" We answer, it was the entire, total, and absolute destruction of the Jewish people as a nation. They were driven from their country, and for eighteen hundred years have been deprived of their civil and ecclesiastical institutions, and have been subject to the laws, institutions, and government of other nations.

To the views which we have presented on this text we know of but one plausible objection. It has been objected, "How could the Thessalonian Christians, or the Jews living in Thessalonica, be at all concerned or interested in the destruction of Jerusalem, or the dispersion of the Jewish nation, seeing they lived so far from the scene of that event?" To this we reply, that at the destruction of Jerusalem there was to be a special manifestation of Christ's interference in behalf of his followers. The fulfilment of Christ's prediction in relation to that event would establish his claims to be the "Sent of God" beyond the possibility of a doubt. Then, the persecuting power of the Jews was to be overthrown, and the Christians delivered from those cruelties which they had suffered from their hands. Then, the kingdom of God was to come with power, and Christianity be permanently established in the earth. Hence, it could not but be a subject of interest to all the Christian churches throughout the then civilized world, wherever such churches had been established. Besides, Jerusalem was destroyed at a time when the Jewish people were partaking of a great national feast in that city; and, undoubtedly, many Jews from Thessalonica were there some of whom suffered in that destruction; and all the rest, whether there or at Thessalonica, suffered, in common with their countrymen, in becoming a proverb, a by-word and an hissing, throughout the whole earth.*

* It has been further objected, that "no such rest as our argument supposes was enjoyed by the primitive Christians immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem. On the contrary, they were only delivered from the persecutions which they had endured from the Jews, to suffer still greater persecutions from the Gentiles."

In answer to this, I shall state, and undertake to prove, the following historical facts, viz. :—

1. The principal part of the persecutions endured by the Christians, from the time of the commencement of the public ministry of Christ to the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, was waged by the unbelieving Jews. No matter whether this persecution was waged in Greece, or Rome, or Judea, the Jews were the prime movers and instigators in almost the whole of it. No person conversant with the history of the Christian church, contained in the book of Acts, will be disposed to dispute this ; but, if authority is demanded, here it is. Mosheim says, that "So exceedingly great was the fecundity of the Jewish people, that occasionally multitudes of them had been constrained to emigrate from their native country ; and, at the time of Christ's birth, the descendants of Abraham were to be met with in every part of the known world. In all the provinces of the Roman empire, in particular, they were to be found in great numbers. The Jews out of Palestine, in the Roman provinces, did not yield to those in Jerusalem, in point of cruelty to the innocent disciples of Christ. We learn from the history of the Acts of the Apostles, and other records of unquestionable authority, that they spared no labor, but zealously seized on every occasion, for stimulating the magistrates against the Christians, and setting on the multitude to demand their destruction."—See Mosheim's Commentaries on the Ecclesiastical History of the First Three Centuries, vol. 1, p. 105, and Mosh. Eccl. Hist., vol. 1, p. 69.

2. The first persecution against the Christians, which was authorized by any heathen power, was that under Nero, the Roman emperor, in the year 64. See Dwight's Dictionary of the New Testament, p. 150. This was six years before the destruction of Jerusalem. Jerusalem was destroyed in the year 70, when Vespasian was Emperor of Rome. Vespasian reigned nine years, and was succeeded by his son Titus, who reigned two years. Under neither of these emperors was there any persecution against Christians. These facts are so well known as to require no proof.

3. The first persecution against the Christians, after the destruction of Jerusalem, was that under Domitian, the Roman emperor, in the year 94 or 95 ; and this was of but short duration, and was not severe. Fleury says, "The Emperor Domitian persecuted the Christians at the latter end of his reign." And, speaking of a certain declaration of the writer of the book of Revelation, to the church of Smyrna, he says, "He encourageth them, and foretelleth that some of them will be in tribulation during the space of ten days, which undoubtedly happened in the reign of Domitian, which was short, and not violent." — Fleu. Eccl. Hist., vol. 1, b. 2, p. 151. Tillemont says that Dodwell thought "this persecution (as it related to the Christians) proceeded no further than banishment, and not to death, nor even to torments." — Till. Eccl. Mem., vol. 2, p. 413. That this was the first persecution after the destruction of Jerusalem is evident from the testimony of Eusebius. He says, speaking of Domitian, that he "appointed himself successor of Nero in hatred and war against God." — Euseb. Eccl. Hist., b. 3, chap. 15. In regard to the time of this persecution, although

13. Heb. 6 : 1, 2, Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection ; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

This language was addressed by Paul to the Jewish converts to Christianity. By examining it with the connection, it will be seen that Paul was warning the Hebrew Christians of the consequences

Mosheim in his Ecclesiastical History states, that "it began in the year 93 or 94 ;" yet, in another work written on a review of that, he says "it began about the year 94 or 95." — Mosh. Com., vol. 1, sect. 36 Tillemont believes, on the authority of Eusebius and Jerome, supported by Juvenal and Lactantius, that it began in the year 95. — Till. Eccl. Mem., vol. 2, p. 413. Nerva succeeded Domitian in the year 96, so that this persecution must have been short. After the death of Domitian, the church enjoyed rest from persecution until after the close of the first century. Milner says, "Nerva, Domitian's successor, published a pardon for those who were condemned for impiety, recalled those who were banished, and forbade the accusing of any men on account of impiety or Judaism. Others, who were under accusation or under sentence of condemnation, now escaped by the lenity of Nerva. This brings us to the close of the century, in which we behold the Christians, for the present, in a state of external peace."—Miln. Ch. Hist, vol. 1, p. 105.

4. After the destruction of Jerusalem, the Christians in Judea enjoyed a season of quiet and rest of more than sixty years' continuance. Tillemont says, "It was under the government of St. Simeon, that the (Christians) Jews left Jerusalem by God's order, before that city was besieged in the year 70, and withdrew beyond Jordan into the city of Pella. After the destruction of Jerusalem, the Christians returned thither, and appeared with reputation by reason of a great number of prodigies and miracles, so that the church of Jesus Christ flourished again there, being composed of a great number of Jews who had embraced the faith, and thus continued until the city was destroyed again in the last years of Adrian." — Till. Eccl. Mem., vol. 2, p. 145. Adrian died, and was succeeded by Antoninus Pius, in 138 ; so that the time the Christians had the peaceful occupancy of Jerusalem and Judea was more than sixty years. Milner says, "The congregation of Christian Jews were commanded by an oracle, revealed to the best approved among them, that, before the wars began, they should depart from the city, and inhabit a village beyond Jordan, called Pella. Thither they retired, and were saved from the destruction which soon after overwhelmed their countrymen ; and, in so retiring, they at once observed the precept, and fulfilled the well-known prophecy of their Saviour. The death of Nero, and the destruction of Jerusalem, would naturally occasion some respite to them from their sufferings ; and we hear no more of their persecuted state till the reign of Domitian, the last of the Flavian family, who succeeded to the empire in the year 81. He does not appear to have raged against the Christians, till the latter end of his reign." — Miln. Ch. Hist., vol. 1, p. 104. Gibbon says, "The Jewish Christians, who united the law of Moses with the Christian religion, remained in solitude in Pella about sixty years, enjoying the comfort of visiting the Holy City, which they yet loved and revered. They were vastly outnumbered by the Christians from Gentile nations, who rejected the Mosaic ceremonies of falling away from their Christian profession; and also of the consequences of resting merely upon the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. He also exhorts them to go on from one degree of Christian knowledge to another, and from one Christian grace to another, until they arrive to perfection. He accuses them of being "dull of hearing," of needing to be taught, whereas, their opportunities had been such, that they ought to have been teachers. See chap. 5 : 11, 12. Hence, he exhorts them to leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and to go on unto perfection — that is, leave these principles or rudiments, as the school-boy leaves the first rudiments of his education, and commences the study of some higher branches, not to forget them, not to neglect them, but to make a wise use and improvement of them, and at the same time continue to rise higher, and still higher, in the scale of Christian knowledge and improvement. Now, if they rested upon the mere first principles of the doctrine of Christ, there was danger of their sinking down into a cold, lethargic state; of their resting contented where they were, and never making any effort to improve, either in knowledge or virtue; of their resting upon the mere forms and ceremonies of religion, and of their being contented with the letter, without the spirit, of Christianity. In this way they would, as did their fathers under the Legal dispensation, "lay again the foundation of repentance from dead works," and "of faith toward God" — that is, it would become necessary that their faith toward God should be renewed. "Of the doctrine of baptisms" — that is, the washings and purifications under the Law. "And of laying on of hands." It is well known that the laying on of hands was a legal ceremony under the Law. "And of resurrection of the dead." For the confirmation of the truth of Judaism, and for the confirmation of the faith of the Jews in that religion, persons were raised from the dead, and other miracles were wrought under the Legal dispensation. "And of eternal judgment." The phrase translated eternal judgment here is krimatos aionion — that is, judgment of the age, or judgment of old. This is an allusion to those great temporal judgments, by which the

But under the reign of Hadrian the desperate fanaticism of the Jews filled up the measure of their calamities, and the Romans exercised the rights of victory with unusual rigor. A new city was founded on Mount Zion, privileged as a colony, and the Jewish Christians, or Nazarenes, by giving up their Jewish habits, enjoyed a free admission into the colony of Hadrian." —Gibbon's Rome, vol. 2, chap. 15, p. 66

Jewish religion was established. Now, if these Hebrew Christians rested upon the mere first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and the consequences should be as stated above, then it would require that they should be roused from their lethargy, indifference, and formality, by the same or similar means that God employed to rouse the Jews from their stupidity, under the Legal dispensation. Nothing is said in this text about judgment in a future state of existence, nor about a resurrection to immortal life. No. Paul alludes to circumstances and events which transpired under the Legal dispensation; and, under that dispensation, although some persons were raised from natural death to natural life, yet no person was raised to immortal life; nor was judgment ever executed upon any person living under that dispensation in a future world.

That the exposition we have given of this text is correct, we think is evident from the words which immediately follow it. "And this will we do if God permit;"— that is, leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and go on unto perfection. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world (aionos) to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again to repentance." That is, as the connection shows, it is not in the power of man to renew such to repentance by any power of argument or persuasion he is possessed of. It can only be done by a similar display of God's power, as was exhibited in the miracles and judgments by which the Jewish religion was established, and by which the Jews, when they fell away from their profession of this religion, were brought to repentance, and their faith in God was renewed. We will close our remarks on this text with the following extract from Rev. James Peirce. He says: "The common interpretation makes this [the phrase eternal judgment] to refer to the final judgment. I think that the words are to be understood in a very different manner, and krima here seems to be put for temporal judgment. . . . . The word aionios, which we have rendered eternal, I take to respect not the time to come, but the time past, and to signify ancient, or past long ago. That the word is thus used without any respect to eternity, we may see Rom. 16: 25; 2 Tim. 1: 9; Titus 1: 2. See, also, those places in the LXX. Psalm 77: 5; Prov. 22: 28; Jer. 18: 15; Ezek

36 : 2. According to this account of the words, we may consider the Jewish religion as established by the ancient and tremendous judgments, of the execution of which the books of Moses give an account, — such as the deluge, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and, more especially, the drowning of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea, and perhaps the judgments of God upon the Israelites in the wilderness for their impenitence and unbelief." — See Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles, &c., by the late Rev. and learned Mr. Jas. Peirce, of Exon., London, 1733.

14. 2 Peter 2 : 17. These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever.

Peter was speaking of certain false teachers, probably Judaizing teachers, who privily should introduce heresies into the Christian church, and overthrow the faith of some. He does not say that this "mist of darkness" was reserved for them in a future state of existence, nor that they should suffer this mist of darkness in a future world. On the contrary, he says they shall "bring upon themselves swift destruction."— See verse 1. Again he says, their "judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."— See verse 3. Peter had heard the predictions of our Lord respecting the punishment which was reserved for the unbelieving Jews, and for false professors and false teachers; and he knew that that punishment, when he wrote, was nigh at hand; and to this he evidently alludes. If the banishment of the Jews from the land of Judea is called "everlasting punishment," without intending to signify that it is of endless duration, as we have shown to be the fact, with what propriety might the judicial blindness which came upon them be called the "mist of darkness forever!"

15. Jude 1 : 6. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day.

In examining this text, we will first compare it with its parallel in

2 Peter 2 : 4. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment.

The first question to be considered is, Who or what were these angels? It has been supposed that they were holy and happy angels of God in heaven; but, in consequence of their rebelling against God, after a tremendous conflict in the paradise above, they were thrust out of heaven, and confined in the manner related in these texts. But to this view of the subject we object as follows: 1. We are not authorized to believe in any such rebellion, and war, and fall of angels from heaven. The Bible gives us no account of this kind, and certainly we could know nothing about it except by divine revelation. It may be pretended, by some, that the book of Revelation furnishes such a history; but no respectable commentator on the Bible ever pretended that any such account is contained in the book of Revelation; and if not there, certainly it is nowhere else in the Bible. 2. To suppose that any such war ever happened in heaven, is to suppose that heaven is not that holy, happy place, that it is everywhere represented to be in the Bible. 3. If holy, happy angels in heaven could fall away, what security have we that mankind, when they get to heaven, will not do the same? Certainly, none at all; and hence to talk about any certainty of our endless happiness in heaven, is to give a false representation of the subject. 4. The word which is here rendered angels is defined, by all lexicon writers, to signify a messenger, one who brings news, a legate, an agent, the bishop or president of a church. It is, therefore, a name of office, and not of nature. We think it far more rational and scriptural to understand it here of human messengers, or agents, than of superhuman, or angels of God. 5. The epistle of Jude "is one of those books the genuineness of which was disputed in the primitive ages, and which, therefore, as Dr. Lardner well observes, 'ought not to be alleged as affording alone sufficient proof of any doctrine.' Grotius ascribes it to a bishop of Jerusalem, in the reign of Adrian; but it is commonly believed to have been written by Judas, otherwise called Lebbeus and Thaddeus, the son of Alpheus, the brother of James the less, and first cousin of our Lord. The design of the epistle is to guard its readers against the errors and crimes of the Gnostics. The epistle of Jude has as little evidence, either external or internal, in its favor as any book of the New Testament."—See Im. Ver., Note. 6. The passage in 2 Peter which is parallel to this in Jude, is found in an epistle which is also "of doubtful authority." 7. "From the change of style in the second chapter, this chapter is the most doubtful portion of the epistle." 8. "By those who admit the genuineness of these epistles, the second chapter of Peter is supposed to have been a quotation from some ancient apocryphal book; and that Jude consulted the epistle of Peter when writing his own; and that these writers might not mean to give authority to the doctrine, nor to sanction it in the least; but merely allude to it by way of illustration, and to argue with their readers upon known and allowed principles."—See Im. Ver., Note. 9. The connection in which these passages are found, shows that it is quite possible that the writers might have alluded to the spies, or messengers, who were sent to explore the land of Canaan. See Chapter VI.

But what we are more particularly concerned with now, is the meaning of the word everlasting, here applied to the chains with which these angels were bound. Let it be noticed that Peter simply calls them "chains," without saying anything about their being everlasting. The passage in Jude proves, of itself, that the word everlasting is here used in a limited sense. Mark the phraseology. "In everlasting chains, under darkness, unto"—here is a limitation of it — "unto the judgment of the great day." Nothing is said about their being punished endlessly after the judgment spoken of; nor is this judgment said to be in another world. For an explanation of the phrase "judgment of the great day," see Chapter VIII. It is there shown that any time of remarkable visitation of punishment upon the wicked is called in the Scriptures a great and terrible day of the Lord, or something to the same import; and that none of these phrases are used to designate any period of time in a future world.

16. Jude 1 : 7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

In the first place, let us compare this with the parallel passage in

2 Peter 2 : 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly.

This passage in Jude is supposed by some to teach the endless misery of the inhabitants of the cities spoken of, in a future state of existence. But we cannot adopt this view of the subject for the following reasons: 1. The scripture writers, both of the Old and New Testament, frequently allude to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, yet not a single one of them has given the least intimation that the inhabitants of those cities were doomed to endless misery.

In the 19th chapter of Genesis we have a particular account of this destruction, but not a hint is given that these people were swept off from the earth by fire and brimstone, only to endure still worse torments after death. In the 18th chapter of the same book we have an account of Abraham's intercession for that people that they might be spared; and although he alludes to their extreme danger of being overthrown by the temporal judgments of God, yet he says nothing about their exposure to still greater sufferings after those judgments should have been executed. From this fact we infer that either they were not exposed to any such sufferings, or, if they were, Abraham was ignorant of that fact; or if he was not, he was culpably negligent in this respect, and did not act as modern limitarians and believers in the doctrine of endless misery would have acted under the same circumstances. The fair presumption is, that he had no faith in their exposure to any other sufferings than those which they were to experience on the earth. But it may be said, "These people might have been exposed to misery after death, and yet Abraham and the scripture writers have been ignorant of that fact." This is barely possible, but extremely improbable. But, certainly, it will not be disputed that God knew all about this. Well, where has he informed us that these people have received such a tremendous doom as is commonly supposed? When he sent the two destroying angels to warn Lot and his family of the approaching destruction, he gave them no instructions to inform them, or the Sodomites, of any judgment to be executed after death. Now, can it be supposed that God knew of a woe ten thousand times more tremendous than that which consisted in their being swept off from the earth, as with the besom of destruction, and yet neglected to give them any warning of it, or to say one single word concerning it? In the 16th chapter of Ezekiel, God alludes a number of times to the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah; but he gives no intimations of any punishment which they experienced, except that which consisted in their being destroyed from off the earth. 2. The text itself is entirely silent in regard to any other punishment than that which was inflicted in this life. The "eternal fire" spoken of, was the fire which destroyed the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, and burnt up their inhabitants. In Gen. 19: 24, 25, we have the following account: "Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground." If these people did actually suffer a worse calamity than this in the future world, here was the very place to have mentioned it. But no such information is given. 3. The text in Peter says nothing about "eternal fire," but says that these cities and their inhabitants were "condemned with an overthrow;" and both Peter and Jude say, that they were "set forth for an example." And Peter adds, that they were "an ensample to those that after should live ungodly." Now, how could their punishment in another world be an example to people living in this? Certainly they could not see them suffering this punishment; nor could they know anything about it, except by divine revelation; and we have seen that no such revelation was given. But the utter destruction of those cities and their inhabitants, by fire from God out of heaven, was a visible example to the Jewish people of God's retributive justice, and of his great displeasure against sin. 4. In the 16th chapter of Ezekiel we have a prediction of the return of Sodom and Gomorrah to their former estate. Now, whether this relates to the inhabitants of those cities, or to the cities themselves, it proves that the "eternal fire," which burnt up those cities and their inhabitants, cannot be endless in duration.

But it may be asked, "How could this fire be called eternal, unless it is endless in duration?" We answer, in the same way that the fire which burnt on the Jewish altar could be said to burn forever. Indeed, it is not only said of this fire "it shall burn forever," but it is added, "it shall NEVER go out." This is nowhere said in the Bible of the fire which destroyed the Sodomites. Why, then, should the latter be thought to be endless, and the former be allowed to be limited? But there are several reasons why this fire might be called eternal, without supposing it to be of endless duration. 1. Because it burned till it had utterly destroyed the inhabitants of those cities from off the earth, and consumed the cities themselves beyond the possibility of their ever being inhabited or rebuilt by man. 2. Because these cities were built on a sort of bituminous coal, so that this fire continued to burn for many ages, even to the time of the writing of the epistle of Jude. And some writers tell us, that even after this time smoke and flame was sometimes seen to issue from the site of those cities. 3. This fire might be called eternal, in the same sense as the destruction of other cities and places is called perpetual, everlasting, &c. See Jer. 18: 15, 16; 23: 40, and 51: 39; Ezek. 26: 20, 21, and 35: 9.

But the phrase here rendered eternal fire is puros aionion, the literal rendering of which would be, "the fire of the age," or "the fire of old." The simple declaration of the apostle then is, that the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah suffered the vengeance of the fire of the age, or age-lasting fire; and no reference is had to any punishment beyond this life.

17. Jude 1: 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever.

By comparing this with 2 Peter 2: 17, it will be seen that the one is parallel with the other; and that both Peter and Jude are speaking on the same subject, of the same persons, and of the same punishment. Our remarks on 2 Peter 2: 17, are therefore equally applicable on this text in Jude. It is there shown that no reference is had to punishment in a future state of existence, much less to a punishment which shall never end.

18. Rev. 14: 11. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

In examining this text, the questions to be considered are — 1. Who were to be punished in the manner described in this passage? The connection and the text itself show it was to be those who worshipped "the beast and his image;" those who received "the mark of the beast in their forehead or in their hand," or those who received "the mark of his name." 2. When were they to be punished? The text and context show it was to be at the very time when they worshipped the beast. "And they have no rest, day nor night, who worship the beast and his image." 3. Where were they to be punished? Why, plainly not in eternity, but in time; during the continuance of day and night. "And they have no rest, day nor night, who worship the beast and his image." But see verses 9 and 10, "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." Compare this with Rev. 16: 1, 2, "And I heard a great voice out of the temple, saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God UPON THE EARTH. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a NOISOME AND GRIEVOUS SORE upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image." This proves beyond all controversy that the punishment spoken of in the text under consideration, was inflicted in this world. The beast spoken of in the text is acknowledged on all hands to be a figure of some false object of worship. No one supposes that this beast will exist in another world, or that he will be worshipped there; and as the punishment of those who worshipped the beast was to be experienced during the time that this worship was rendered, hence the text can have no reference to punishment to be inflicted in another world.

Sufficient has already been said on this text to show that it affords no proof of the doctrine of endless punishment; but, for the satisfaction of those who may wish to know more on the subject, we offer the following additional remarks.

All the figures employed in this text, and in the context, are frequently employed in the sacred Scriptures to designate punishment to be inflicted in this world; but not one of them is used, in a single instance, to designate punishment in another world. 1. We have the word "fire." We have already shown that no term is more frequently employed by the sacred writers to represent God's temporal judgments, than the term fire. 2. We have "fire and brimstone." This phrase is frequently employed for the same purpose as the term fire. See Job 18: 15, "Brimstone shall be scattered upon his (the wicked man's) habitation." Ps. 11: 6, "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup." Isa. 34: 9, "And the streams thereof (of the land of Idumea) shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone." Ezek. 38: 22, "And I will plead against him (Gog) with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hail stones, fire and brimstone." 3. We have "wrath of God." Luke 21: 23, "For (at the destruction of Jerusalem) there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people." 1 Thes. 2: 16, "For the wrath is come upon them (the Jews) to the uttermost." 4. We have "cup of the Lord's indignation." See Ps. 11; 6, above, and Ps. 75: 8, "For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture, and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them." Jer. 25: 15—18, "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me, Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee to drink it. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink unto whom the Lord had sent me: to wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse, as it is this day." 5. We have "smoke of their torment." Ps. 37: 20, "They (the wicked) shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Isa. 34: 10, "The smoke thereof (of the land of Idumea) shall go up forever; from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it forever and ever."

The meaning of the text, when stripped of its figures, appears to be this: That as the worshippers of the beast were the adherents of a false religion, and rendered worship to something besides the true God; hence, they would find no rest or enjoyment in the service of such a religion; but, on the contrary, it would be to them a source of continual disquietude, anxiety and torment. This idea is expressed in the text and context under the figure of their being "tormented with fire and brimstone," of the "smoke of their torment ascending up forever and ever;" that is, unceasingly, perpetually; and of their having "no rest day nor night." There are quite a sufficient number of such kinds of religion in the world, and God knows they have too many adherents, who experience the truth of the declaration contained in the text in all its length and breadth.

To this exposition of the text we know of but one plausible objection. It is said that "this punishment must be in another world, because it is said to be inflicted 'in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb.'" But, have we not shown that the worshippers of the beast were to be punished at the very time when they worshipped him, and in the place where time is measured by day and night? Most certainly we have. If, then, the objector supposes that the presence of the holy angels, or messengers, and the presence of the Lamb, is confined exclusively to another world, he must also suppose that the beast is in another world, and that he is worshipped there. He must also suppose that time in eternity is measured by day and night. Again, have we not proved that the seven angels poured out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth; and that a grievous punishment fell upon the worshippers of the beast in this world? This cannot be denied. Well, then, we ask, which is most rational and consistent, to conclude that the beast exists in another world, and has his worshippers there; or that his worshippers might be punished in this world, and at the same time that punishment be inflicted in the presence of the holy messengers, and in the presence of the Lamb? It will be admitted that by the "Lamb" here is signified Jesus Christ. Well, did he not promise to be with his disciples, even after he ascended to heaven? And has he not promised that where two or three are gathered together in his name, there he will be in their midst? The presence of the Lamb, then, is not confined exclusively to another world, but may be, and is, in this world. Hence, this punishment might have been inflicted in the presence of the Lamb, and, at the same time, have been inflicted in this world.

19. Rev. 19: 3. And again they said, Alleluia, and her smoke rose up forever and ever.

The connection shows that this was spoken of spiritual Babylon — that "great city," called the "beast with seven heads and ten horns." In the 17th and 18th chapters we have a particular account of this beast, and of his overthrow. In chapter 17: 8, we are told that this beast "ascended out of the bottomless pit." This proves that the bottomless pit is in this world, for no one will suppose that cities can ascend out of such a pit in a future state of existence. But it is also said, that this beast shall "go into perdition." This shows that it is not necessary to go into a future state to go into perdition; for, surely, no one will contend that cities are to be carried into another world, and be sent into perdition there! What the nature of this perdition was, may be learned from chapter 17 : 15—17, "The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and BURN HER WITH FIRE." See, also, 18 : 2—10, "And he (the angel) cried with a loud voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her PLAGUES come in one day, DEATH, AND MOURNING, AND FAMINE; and she shall be UTTERLY BURNED WITH FIRE: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament her; when they shall see THE SMOKE OF HER BURNING, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas! that great city Babylon, that mighty city! FOR IN ONE HOUR IS THY JUDGMENT COME." It is supposed by some, that Babylon here spoken of, signifies pagan Rome. But, if the reader will examine all that is said about it in the Revelation, he will see that it is much more natural to understand it of the city of Jerusalem. For instance, see chapter 11 : 7, 8. "And when they (the two witnesses) shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the BOTTOMLESS PIT shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, WHERE ALSO OUR LORD WAS CRUCIFIED." We are also told that "that great city was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet,"—see chapter 18 : 16,—and that men "cried, when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city?" Verse 18. Again: "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy APOSTLES and PROPHETS, for God hath avenged you on her." Verse 20. Once more: "And in her was found the blood of PROPHETS, and of SAINTS, and of all that were slain upon the earth." Verse 24. Then the 19th chapter commences thus: "And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God: for true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said, Alleluia, and her smoke rose up forever and ever." Now, whether this was pagan Rome, or Jerusalem, no further proof is needed that there is no allusion here to punishment in another world. We see that here, as in many other places in the Bible, the term fire is used as a figure of God's temporal judgments, and that the phrase forever and ever is evidently used in a limited sense.

20. Rev. 20 : 10. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever.

We have seen what the beast here spoken of was, and that he was to go into perdition — that is, be utterly destroyed by the judgments of God. This text shows that the same fate awaited the devil or impostor. The lake of fire and brimstone here signifies precisely the same as perdition, and, so far from being in another world, is expressly declared to be in this. See Rev. 19 : 20, 21 "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These BOTH were cast ALIVE into a LAKE OF FIRE burning with BRIMSTONE. And the REMNANT were SLAIN with the SWORD of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth; and all the FOWLS were filled with their FLESH." In this passage, and in the text under consideration, "the persons who are said to be tormented forever and ever are not real, but figurative, and symbolic persons — the impostor, the beast, and the false prophet. The place, therefore, the kind, and the duration of their torment must also be figurative." The meaning seems to be, that the enemies of Christianity, the advocates of error, and false prophets, together with the spirit of wickedness itself, should be overcome and utterly destroyed. The punishment spoken of in the text was to be inflicted, like that upon the "worshippers of the beast," in the place where time is measured by day and night. Of course it could not be in eternity.

Such are all the texts in the Bible, where the words eternal, everlasting, forever, and forever and ever, are applied to punishment. We have not omitted one to our knowledge. We have found these words applied to punishment twenty times; but in Isa. 33 : 14; Jer. 17 : 4; Matt. 18 : 8, and 25 : 41; Jude 1 : 6, 7; and Rev. 14 : 11, they are applied to the instrument of punishment; and in Rev. 19 : 3, to the punishment of a place; so that in reality these words are applied to the punishment of persons only twelve times in the whole Bible — five times in the Old Testament, and seven times in the New. In the Old they are thus applied, once in Job, once in Psalms, once in Jeremiah, once in Malachi, and once in Daniel. In the New, once in Matthew, once in Mark, once in 2 Thessalonians, once in Hebrews, once in 2 Peter, once in Jude, and once in Revelation. The word eternal is not applied to the punishment of persons in a single instance in the Old Testament, and but twice in the New — once in Mark and once in Hebrews. The word everlasting is thus applied in the Bible four times; twice in the Old Testament, and twice in the New. In the Old it is thus applied, once in Jeremiah, and once in Daniel. In the New, once in Matthew, and once in 2 Thessalonians. The word forever is applied as above four times in the Bible; twice in the Old, and twice in the New Testament. In the Old, it is applied in this manner, once in Job, and once in Psalms. In the New, once in 2 Peter, and once in Jude. The phrase forever and ever is applied to the punishment of persons twice in the Bible; once in Psalms, and once in Revelation. Neither of these words is applied to the punishment of persons in either of the following books of the Old Testament: — Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Ruth, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, 1 and 2 Chronicles Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon Isaiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, nor in Zechariah. Nor are they thus applied in any of the following books of the New Testament: — Luke, John, Acts, Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon, James, 1 Peter, nor in 1, 2, and 3 John. Whether the passages in which these words are applied to punishment give the least countenance or support to the doctrine of endless punishment, the reader can judge.

SECTION IV.

Statement of Facts, showing that the Fact of the Application of the Words Eternal, Everlasting, &c., to Punishment, is no Proof of the Doctrine of Endless Punishment.

1. We have seen that the words everlasting, forever, and forever and ever, in the Old Testament, are translated from the Hebrew olim. Taylor, Parkhurst, Stuart, and indeed all lexicon writers, admit that the word olim does not of itself signify an endless duration. In other words, that this is not the radical meaning of the word. Hence, they define it to signify "a duration which is concealed;" "time hidden from man, whether definite or indefinite, whether past or future."

2. These words in the New Testament are translated from the Greek word aion and aionios. The authorities referred to above admit that these words are frequently used to express a limited period of time, and that they correspond with the Hebrew olim; and, also, that in their scripture usage they are synonymous with that term.

3. Although the authorities just referred to contend that aion and aionios are sometimes used to express endless duration, yet of this there is no proof; and although they assert that olim is sometimes used to signify endless duration, yet of this there is no proof; and, besides, even they themselves admit that it signifies this, "not from the proper force of the word, but when the sense of the place requires it, as God and his attributes." But, allowing they are correct in this, — and in our opinion it is a point of but very little importance, — then it will follow that the extent of duration expressed by these terms must be determined by the nature of the thing to which they are applied; and, unless it can be shown that punishment is absolutely endless in its nature, the fact of the application of these terms to punishment does not prove the endless duration of that punishment.

4. It is beyond all dispute, that these words are frequently, and in a great variety of ways, used in the Scriptures, both of the Old and the New Testament, to signify limited duration. Out of six hundred and fifty-two occurrences of olim, and its corresponding words, in the Old Testament, it is susceptible of the clearest demonstration that in six hundred instances it expresses only limited duration.

5. Our translators have rendered olim, and its corresponding words, by nearly thirty different words and phrases, most of them signifying duration, but varying, as to its extent, from three days to endless duration.

6. It is an indisputable fact that the words olim and aion are used in the Scriptures in the plural number. Now, had the inspired writers understood these words to express endless duration, there would have been no necessity of their using them in the plural number, but, on the contrary, such use of them would be highly improper.

7. These words are not only used in the plural number, but words are added to extend their signification. The literal rendering of Exodus 15 : 18, is, "The Lord shall reign from aion to aion and farther." Dan. 12 : 3, "And they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars through the aions and farther." Mic. 4 : 5, "And we will walk in the name of Jehovah our God through the aion and beyond it." Now, if the word aion signifies eternity, then we should be under the necessity of reading these passages thus: — "The Lord shall reign from eternity to eternity, and farther." "And they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars through the eternity and farther." "And we will walk in the name of Jehovah our God through the eternity and beyond it." Now, to speak of a period of time beyond eternity, or to speak of one eternity succeeding another, is absurd. Hence, we conclude the scripture writers did not understand these words to signify endless duration.

8. If we understand aion to express endless duration, then we shall read in the Bible of eternities, of the beginning of eternity, of the end of eternity, and of this eternity, and the eternity to come. Eph. 2: 7, "That in the aions (eternities) to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace." Col. 1: 26, "Even the mystery which hath been hid from aions (eternities), and from generations." Eph. 3: 9, "And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the aion (eternity) hath been hid in God." Titus 1: 2, "In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie promised before the aion (eternity) began." Acts 3: 21, "Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the aion (eternity) began." Matt. 24: 3, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the aion (eternity)." Matt. 28: 20, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the aion (eternity)." Heb. 9: 26, "But now once in the end of the aion (eternity) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." 1 Cor. 10: 11, "And they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the aions (eternities) have come." Matt. 12: 32, "But whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this aion (eternity), nor in the aion (eternity) to come." Eph. 1: 21, "Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this aion (eternity), but also in that to come."

9. It is a matter of some doubt whether these words do of themselves primarily signify duration at all, and whether, when they are used for this purpose, they are not used in an accommodated sense. Dr. Clowes says on this subject, "There has been at least one writer (Rev. Mr. Goodwin, in the Christian Examiner, published in Boston) who has with great learning and judgment examined these words, and who has come to the conclusion that olim, and its equivalent aion, mean spirit, and aionios means spiritual, and that these words never have necessarily the meaning of duration. Without admitting or rejecting the correctness of this sentiment, we must declare that our Saviour has so carefully defined eternal life as consisting in 'the knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ as sent by him,' and as being that which is here enjoyed before the resurrection, — as something, in short, which is exclusive of that life which shall be enjoyed in the future world, — that we feel ourselves compelled to admit, that, in the teachings of our Saviour, the term aionios, rendered eternal, in the phrase eternal life, refers much more to the character of that life than to its duration. The only question is, whether the terms olim, aion, and aionios, have not in other parts of Scripture a corresponding meaning."

10. If we understand these terms to be expressive of endless duration, we put an unanswerable argument into the hands of the Jews. It is an incontrovertible fact that these terms are applied to God's ancient covenant with the Jews, to the statutes of Moses, and to the priesthood of Aaron. With what propriety, then, may the Jews contend that all these were designed to be of perpetual continuance, and that Jesus must have been an impostor, inasmuch as one ostensible object which he had in view was to abrogate the institutions of Moses, and bring the Legal covenant to a close!

11. But we also set the Bible at variance with itself. We have seen that these terms are applied to the ordinances of Moses, and yet, in Heb. 8: 13, and 9: 10, we are expressly told that the old covenant and the Mosaic ordinances are done away. We have seen that these terms are applied to the Aaronic priesthood, and yet, in Hebrews, 7th chapter, we are told that that priesthood is abolished. These terms are also applied a number of times to the kingdom of Christ, and yet, in 1 Cor. 15: 24, we are told that this kingdom shall come to an end. "Then cometh the end, when he (Christ) shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."

12. Although these terms are applied to the punishment of persons twelve times in the Bible, yet in not one single instance are they applied to punishment after death, or in a future state of existence. We have examined every passage particularly and carefully, and have not been able to find even one which has any reference to a future world. Now, this is an important fact. How can it be supposed now that the scripture writers believed in a future state of unending punishment, and understood these terms as expressive of endless duration, and yet should not, in a single instance, apply these terms to that punishment? This is an absurdity so glaring that it must not be overlooked. The Bible abounds with exhortations to, and warnings, and threats, and denunciations against, the wicked, yet nowhere between its lids do we find the terms olim, aion, and aionios, applied to any punishment whatever in another world. This fact, upon the minds of the candid, will have, and upon the minds of all ought to have, great weight.

13. It is also a fact that a great majority of the scripture writers have not applied these terms to punishment — that is, the punishment of persons — at all. And of those who have, they have done so only in a very few instances. Job, David, Jeremiah, Daniel, and Malachi, are the only Old Testament writers who apply these terms to punishment; and they, each, only once. Jesus Christ applied the terms in question to punishment only twice; Paul, twice; Peter, once; Jude, once; and supposing John to have been the author of the book of Revelation, he once. Now, can it be believed that Moses, Joshua, Ruth, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Solomon, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, and Zechariah, could have believed in the doctrine of future endless punishment, and that these terms were expressive of endless duration, and yet that, in all their denunciations against the wicked, they should never apply these terms to punishment of any kind, either in this world or another? The man who can believe this must have a mind not regulated by evidence in making up his opinions. Such an one is prepared to believe almost anything.

We will now notice some objections. It is said that "these terms must express endless duration because they are applied to God." If the objector means by this that because a term expressive of duration is applied to God, therefore it expresses endless duration in all cases, we have shown this to be contrary to fact. For we have seen that the terms in question are applied to God, and yet are applied to things which have had, and to things which are to have, an end. If he means by it that because a term expressive of duration is applied to God, therefore that term is of itself expressive of endless duration, this also is contrary to fact. For we have shown that the term olim is applied to God, and yet that eternity is not the radical meaning of the word; and that if it expresses endless duration when applied to God, it is not from the natural force of the word, but because the Being to whom it is applied is endless in his nature. We say a great man, and the great God; but when we apply the word great to man, we do not mean that he is as great as God. We say a good man, and the good God; but we do not mean that the man is as good as God. So, also, we say of a man, he is an everlasting talker, and of God, he is everlastingly good; but we do not mean that the man will continue to talk as long as God is good. We say, too, of a child, he is eternally in mischief, and of God, he is the eternal God; but we do not mean that the child will continue to do mischief as long as God exists.

2. It has been said that "aionios, when it stands alone, signifies endless duration." Aionios is an adjective. It must, therefore, be connected with some noun, either expressed or understood, which it qualifies. Adjectives never make or add qualities to nouns, but simply express qualities which are inherent in the noun itself. Neither can an adjective express any more than the noun to which it is prefixed, or from which it is derived. Indeed, it is often the case that nouns express more than can be expressed by adjectives. For instance, we say of a man, he is lovely; by this we mean that he is possessed of some lovely qualities; but if we say the man is love, we express by this that love is the inherent principle of his very nature. When we say God is lovely, we do not express as much as when we say God is love. For God might be lovely, and yet love not be the essence of his nature; but when we say he is love, we express by it that love is the central sun of all his excellences; that it is the sum and substance, the all and in all, and the very essence of his nature. Now, as the adjective aionios is derived from the noun aion, hence it can express no more than aion.

3. But it is said that "these terms must express endless duration when applied to punishment, inasmuch as, in some texts where they are thus applied, the punishment spoken of is in the same text contrasted with eternal life." There are but two instances of this in the Bible, — one in Dan. 12 : 2, and one in Matt. 25 : 46. It by no means follows that because everlasting punishment is contrasted with eternal life, therefore the punishment spoken of is equal in duration with the life spoken of, even allowing the life to be of endless duration. Before this can be admitted, it must first be proved that punishment is as enduring in its nature as life. But we have shown that the word rendered punishment, in Matt. 25 : 46, signifies chastisement, or correction, for the benefit of the punished. Now, to speak of endless correction, is a contradiction in terms. Hence the fact of the application of the term aionios to punishment does not prove that punishment is endless, for two reasons. First, because aionios does not of itself express endless duration; and, second, because the punishment to which it is applied is limited in its nature. Again, these terms are applied to different things in the Bible, and in the same passages, when all must acknowledge that one is limited and the other endless. Hab. 3: 6, "And the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting." See, also, Rom. 16: 25, 26, "According to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the aionions began, but now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the aionion God." If the objection we are considering is of any force, it proves that the hills and mountains will endure as long as God exists, and that the ages of the world are as ancient and as enduring as God. Whereas Paul, in the text from Romans, speaks expressly of a time when these ages began. What has been said is sufficient to overthrow the objection under consideration; but there is one fact which of itself is sufficient to silence this objection forever. In our remarks on Dan. 12: 2, and Matt. 25: 46, we have shown that the everlasting or eternal life there spoken of is not the life of the resurrection world, but is that life which is imparted to the believer in Jesus, and which may be enjoyed in this state of existence. We have shown that Christ himself defines this life to consist in the "knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ whom he hath sent;" and that he speaks of his followers as being already in the possession of eternal life. Now, in the face of this testimony, who dare assert that eternal life consists in endless beatitude in a future state of existence? Surely no one, who heeds the instructions and the testimony of the great Founder of Christianity, Jesus Christ. As, therefore, the eternal life spoken of in Matt. 25: 46, was confined to this world, so also the everlasting punishment. As the one was limited, so also the other.

4. Again, it is said that, "in our exposition of those texts where these terms are applied to punishment, we have applied nearly all of them to the Jews; and it is unreasonable to suppose that nearly all that is said in the Bible about everlasting punishment was spoken in reference to that people." The objector must be careful how he brings his reason against facts. We know that Universalists have been accused of making a kind of scape-goat of the Jewish people, and of making them bear all the sins of mankind, and all the punishment. But have we not appealed to the context, and the connection of these passages, to prove the correctness of our opinions? If it is a fact, then, that most of these texts relate to the awful doom which came on the Jewish nation, and which they are suffering to this day, it is a fact for which we are not responsible. And if any one is disposed to cavil on this ground, he must cavil with the Bible, not with us. If the objector thinks this opinion is erroneous, he had better be trying to prove it so than to be finding fault.

5. It is also said, that "if these terms do not express endless duration, then we have no proof of the endless existence of God." But do not the Scriptures teach that God is self-existent? And is not his endless existence a self-evident fact? Suppose that no word whatever expressive of duration was ever applied to him, would this make any difference in regard to his duration? Or suppose that all words, of every language under heaven, expressive of duration, were applied to him, and applied to him times without number, would this make his endless existence any more certain? Is God dependent on the meaning of a word for his endless existence? If so, then we may well fear that he will come to naught. But no rational man will pretend this. If, then, God is ever-enduring in his very nature, it is a matter of no consequence whether any word expressive of duration is ever applied to him or not; and if such words are applied to him, it is immaterial whether they express endless duration or not.

6. Once more. It is said that "if these words do not express endless duration, then we have no proof of the endless existence and happiness of mankind in a future world." If no other terms were used to express the duration of man's existence and happiness in the resurrection world, there might be some force in this; but such is not the fact. There are several words applied to life and happiness in the Scriptures which are never applied to punishment; and these words are unequivocal in expressing endless duration. These words are amianton, aphtharton, and akatalutos; rendered endless, undefiled, incorruptible, and immortal. In 2 Cor. 4: 7, we read, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal (aionion) weight of glory." The word and in this passage was supplied by the translators, and weakens the force of the passage. Leaving that word out, we here read of a glory exceeding aionion or eternal. The original is even more full than this. The literal rendering would be, "a glory exceeding eternal to an excess." In Heb. 7 : 16, we read of an endless life; but we nowhere in the Bible read of endless death, of endless misery, woe or pain, nor of endless punishment, nor of an endless hell. In 1 Peter 1 : 4, we read of "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." In Isa. 25 : 8, and 1 Cor. 15 : 54, we are told that "death shall be swallowed up in victory." And in 2 Cor. 5 : 4, we read of mortality being "swallowed up of life." In 2 Tim. 1 : 10, we read of "life and IMMORTALITY being brought to light by Jesus Christ;" but we nowhere read of immortal death and endless pain being brought to light by Jesus Christ, or any other person mentioned in the Bible. In 1 Cor. 15 : 22, we are told that "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Now, just as certain as Christ will endlessly exist, just so certain is it that all mankind will exist endlessly; for they are to be made alive in him. In 1 Cor. 15 : 51, 52, we are told that all mankind shall be changed from "mortal to immortality;" and in verse 54 we are informed that "this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality." These passages prove, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the endless existence of mankind is taught in the Bible, irrespective of the application of olim, aion, and aionios, to that existence.

Such are all the objections to our views of these terms. Whether they are insuperable or not, the reader can judge for himself.

SECTION III.

On the Greek terms KRINO, KRISES, KRIMA, and their different forms, etc., rendered judge, judgment, condemned, condemnation, damned, damnation, etc., in the NEW TESTAMENT.

KRINO occurs as many as seventy-seven times in its different forms in the New Testament; and is rendered judge, judged, and judging, sixty-two times; and once damned (2 Thess. 2: 12.) It is also rendered determined, decreed, ordained, concluded, esteemeth, called in question, sentence, condemneth, condemning, law, etc., in different places.

KRISES occurs upwards of forty times, and is rendered about thirty times judgment, seven times condemnation, and twice damnation. See Matt. 23: 33; Mark 3: 29.

KRIMA occurs about thirty times, and is rendered damnation eight times, judgment and judgments several times, condemned and condemnation about six times; and in 1 Cor. 6: 7, it is rendered go to law; and in Rev. 18: 20, avenged.

SECTION IV.

A Statement of Facts in relation to the Bible doctrine of JUDGMENT.

Much has been said and written respecting a supposed general judgment to take place at what is called the "end of time." It is called the "general judgment," the "last judgment," the "great judgment," the "judgment day," etc. But in the Bible, we nowhere find the phrase, general judgment, last judgment, or the great judgment expressed. It is true that God judges his creatures by established and just principles, in his own way and own time. He judged his ancient people, the Jews, by judges and rulers appointed for that purpose. God frequently visited various nations with judgments and calamities, destroying their cities, country, etc., as in the instances of Egypt, Idumea, Sodom, Gomorrah, Jerusalem and others. These visitations, when individually referred to in the Scriptures, are called "the judgment, the day of judgment," etc. But for us to arrive at correct conclusions in regard to the doctrine of judgment, it is only necessary that we set aside prejudice and preconceived opinions, and strictly observe the teachings of those scriptures where the doctrine is taught.

In the first place, it is necessary to understand the manner in which God judges his creatures. By observing those passages as arranged in Section I. of this Chapter, it will be found, firstly, that God, in appointing judges and rulers over the people, strictly enjoined it upon them to observe wisdom, and execute just judgment in all their proceedings with the people. He commanded them to judge the people with righteousness, and the poor with just judgment; to speak peace to the people, and save the children of the poor and needy.

Goodness and mercy, truth and justice, are inseparably connected with the judgments of God. David says, Ps. 9: 7, 8, "But the Lord shall endure forever: he hath prepared his throne for judgment. And he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness." Verse 6, "The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands." Ps. 33: 4, 5, "For the word of the Lord is right; and all his works are done in truth. He loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord." Ps. 119: 75, "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me." Verse 137, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments."

The above shows the undeniable fact, that God's manner of judging his creatures is not arbitrary or revengeful; but that it is in kindness, and its only object the good of the creature.

In the second place, it is necessary to observe those passages which speak of the introduction of Christ into the world as Judge and Lawgiver. In these passages we find, not only the same spirit of goodness and justice manifested, but a higher degree of sympathy and kindness appears to exist between Christ as judge, and the people as subjects. Christ was to take possession of the throne of his father David, to reign over the house of Israel forever; and to execute justice and judgment in the earth.

Under the Gospel dispensation, Christ fully receives the responsibility of judging the Gentile world, in connection with all the earth; and is obligated to bring forth judgment unto victory. God, in establishing his Son as judge of the world, hath assigned to him a kingdom, in which he is to bear rule and acquit himself of all responsibility. — See Section I., this Chapter. Also the phrases, Kingdom of God, etc., in this work.

In the third place, this judgment is to be executed in accordance with the works of the creature. Christ shall "judge every man according to his works." "Will render to every man according to his deeds," etc. See the passages in their proper place

Let this judgment be called what it may, or be where it may these facts follow: 1. That men are judged and rewarded in accordance with the quality and amount of works performed. What they receive as a reward, or demerit, is an equivalent for the deeds done in the body. Now, should this judgment take place after the resurrection from literal death, and they, there and then, only receive in value the just and strict merit or demerit of their finite and limited performances, what prospect have we in our anticipations of the resurrection world? It is acknowledged by all, that in the resurrection state we shall either receive immortal bliss on the one hand, or endless death on the other; and at the same time are strenuously contending for strict rewards and punishments, as an equivalent for limited demands, or works performed in a finite capacity. Many, if not all, who suppose this judgment to follow the resurrection, evidently overlook the difficulties and absurdities it involves.

It should be borne in mind, that, whatever we receive of God as a state or condition in the resurrection state, it is the free gift of God, and bestowed agreeably to his good pleasure. We should also bear in mind, that while we are contending for judgment according to our works, in or after the resurrection, we are supporting a theory which, if true, would annihilate the gift of heaven, and the merits of Christ. But, by admitting the judgment to be confined to Christ's kingdom established on earth, we see no difficulty in being judged and rewarded according to our works. The works of men are limited and confined to earth; of course all they can receive as an equivalent must also be limited and confined to the same place. Men cannot perform deeds in time, and receive reward for them in eternity, any more than they can sow in one field and reap the same in another; or, than they might expect that the result of good and wholesome diet here would be a sound and healthy state in the eternal world. The conclusions are these: First, the judgment is under Christ and confined to his kingdom on earth. Second, mankind are judged and awarded in strict accordance with their merit or demerit. Third, this judgment is confined to the Gospel kingdom on earth, — that it is the last judgment, — it precedes the resurrection, and will have been closed at the resurrection of the dead.

In the fourth place, we notice the time when, and place where the judgment is executed.

The Scriptures under this head conclusively show that it is in the earth, on the earth, under the sun, confined to earth and the life of man. We find these conclusions sanctioned, by plain and positive teachings, in more than twenty passages of the Bible. We also find that both the righteous and the wicked are judged and awarded in the earth. But we no where find in the Bible a solitary scrap of evidence that this judgment, or any judgment, is to be after men have left this world. In no one passage is it declared that the judgment shall set, or take place, in eternity, or after the resurrection of the dead. God has, in no place, nor at any time, informed his creatures that he would judge and reward them after they were dead, or in another world! But we have abundance of proof that he will do it in this world, during their literal existence. Why, then, are we not willing to yield to the teachings of truth; and acknowledge the utility of being judged and awarded in this life, agreeably to our deserts? And why not acknowledge the folly and inconsistency of men being called from the tombs to be judged, when, and where, it can be of no possible benefit, either to God or themselves? Their fate is acknowledged to be sealed at death, and nothing can be altered for the better or worse. The only fair conclusion is this: men in all ages of the world have received the legitimate result of their doings. These results are called judgments. Second, the Gospel day is the judgment day, and is common, general, or universal. The conduct and proceedings of men are all declared to be good or bad, according to their merit or demerit, under the Gospel. Christ says, "For judgment I am come into the world." Again he says, "Now is the judgment of this world." Here men receive the fruit of their doings. The result is positive and certain. If they believe, are obedient, they are saved, are happy. But if they are unbelieving and disobedient, they are miserable, unhappy, and condemned. The very nature of the Gospel is, to approve or condemn the deeds and actions of men in this life; agreeably to their merit or demerit. Hence, this is not only a day or time of trial, but of judgment, decision, or retribution. It is called "a day," "the day," and sometimes "the hour of judgment." John says, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come. Rev. 14: 6, 7. We think the above remarks, under this head, to be sufficient. All that is necessary to keep any from straying on this subject is, to observe the plain and positive teachings of the Bible, rather than to follow preconceived and superstitious notions, to the violation of their better reason, and the expense of truth and common sense.

On sundry passages, Section II, we remark, first, that whatsoever time or place is referred to, no judgment is spoken of which is to take place after the resurrection from literal death, or even after the close of the Gospel day.

In Matt. 5: 21, 22, we find, that whoever should kill another, or even call his brother a fool, or be angry with him without a cause, should be in danger of the judgment or decision of the Jewish council. In Matt. 12: 41, 42, it is said, "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it. . . . . The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it." The judgment here alluded to is one often spoken of, and as often declared to come upon that generation, the people then living, not in eternity. It is the time of judgment of which Christ speaks when he says, Matt. 23: 33, 35, 36, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (gehenna.) "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation." Chapter 24: 21, "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." All these calamities and afflictions did come upon the people of that age and nation, to the utter destruction of their city, and final overthrow of their national polity. Paul speaks of the same judgment in Acts 24: 25, "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled." This judgment was about to come, or nigh at hand. Peter alludes to the same in 2 Peter 2: 3, "And through covetousness shall they, with feigned words, make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." Peter speaks of the judgment of false teachers and wicked men of that day as lingering not, and their damnation (or sentence to condemnation) as slumbering not: it was about to fall upon them. The same in 1 Peter 4: 7, "But the end of all things is at hand." The end of their civil, political, and religious rites, ceremonies, and institutions. The same in Matt. 16: 27, 28, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." Here is a judgment during the life-time of some then living, in which every man should be rewarded according to his works; all of which shows that it was in this world, and even nigh at hand. There are several passages speaking of the same time, such as Matt. 25: 46, and others which are explained in this work. Matt. 10: 14, 15, "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city." See, also, its parallels in Mark 6: 11, and Luke 10: 11, 12. Here the same time and judgment is referred to as in Matt. 12: 41, 42, and other places. Christ says, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city." (Those who rejected the apostle's preaching.) Our Saviour was almost continually warning the people of an alarming judgment or calamity which was rapidly approaching, and would suddenly and unexpectedly fall upon that people and nation. And as the people then (in Christ's day) had more instruction upon the subject, more light and knowledge, higher facilities from the various means they possessed, their judgment, their calamity, affliction, and perilous distress, would be more intolerable, more protracted and intolerably painful and grievous, than was the judgment and calamity which befell Sodom and Gomorrah. Is not this too true to be disputed? When, or where, was there ever a time or place that suffered more than did the Jews in that calamitous day? See Josephus, and others, on the destruction of Jerusalem. The evils suffered by Sodom and Gomorrah were not so severe and trying as those of Jerusalem. And notwithstanding so many suppose this to relate to a future general judgment, the best critics and commentators of the limitarian orders, are of the same opinion with ourselves. Dr. Hammond says on this subject, "I assure you, the punishment or destruction that will light upon that city shall be such that the destruction of Sodom will appear to be more tolerable than that." He also refers to what he had said in another place on the phrase kingdom of God, where he quoted and explained the text thus: "'Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom in that day,' (i. e., not in the day of judgment to come, for that belongs to each particular person, not whole cities together, but) in that day of the kingdom of God, than for that refractory city. God's dealing with Sodom in the day of their destruction with fire and brimstone, shall be acknowledged to have been more supportable than his dealing with such contumacious, impatient cities of Judea."—Paraphrase on Matt. 10: 15, and Annotations on Matt. 3: 2. The same views are given by Bishop Pearce, Gilbert, Wakefield, Dr. A. Clarke, and others.

We think the above conclusions are correct, and the only rational exposition that can be given upon the subject. But objections are founded on the future tense of the verb, It shall be more tolerable, &c. We think that those who observe the original use of the tenses must be satisfied that they are not there used with the same precision as in our own language at the present day, and that instances often occur which can be reduced to no fixed grammatical principle. But we do not wish to criticize upon the license of those expressions. And if those who raise the above objection to the tense of the verb would persevere in like criticisms with the Bible, we think they would soon be willing to retrace their steps, and adopt more rational rules of interpretation. The fact is this,—the time or judgment of which Christ here speaks was then future; it did not take place until about forty-one years after Christ's day; and when it did come, it was not so tolerable, so easily borne, as that of Sodom and Gomorrah. Consequently he could with all propriety say, It shall be, &c. We will here mention another fact, which, if generally understood, might in a measure tend to obviate the difficulty: the article the is not used in the original text. It stands thus—"en hemera kriseos." In the Greek, we find but one article used which answers to the definite article the in English. Mr. Fisk, in his Greek Grammar, says, "When no article is expressed in Greek, the English indefinite article a is signified." Consequently, we cannot understand our Saviour as pointing in the text to some one, and only one definite judgment, as though there were but one understood by the people; but as of one among others of the kind, transpiring to nations. Many have the impression that there is a general judgment in eternity spoken of by Christ, and that he there alludes to that definite one; whereas, he only alludes to a judgment of a national character which was about to fall upon them. But, should we understand this judgment as a special one of the kind pointed out to the people, we see no objection to calling it the judgment; and we are confident that the Jews understood it in this manner. We find the article nowhere connected with the phrase en hemera kriseos, "a day of judgment," with the exception of one place in the New Testament. 1 John 4: 17, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment (en te hemera kriseos); because he is, so are we in this world." This is the only place where the phrase is used with the article. The day of God's judgment on the Jewish nation — and no other day of judgment was expected during that generation — was near when John wrote the text, and was the greatest day of judgment the world had ever seen; nor was the like ever to be again. It had been predicted by the prophets, and also by our Lord himself, and no doubt was a subject of frequent conversation among Christians, and most people of the day. This day was called by Malachi the day of the Lord which should burn as an oven, the great and dreadful day of the Lord. From its greatness, its being near, and other circumstances, no wonder John called it the day of judgment.

There are other texts which allude to the same time and judgment, which it is not necessary here to mention. Paul speaks of a different judgment in Heb. 9: 27, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." The apostle is here speaking of the judgment or justification of the high priest, after his sacrificial death under the Law. In this chapter he particularly delineates the ceremonies under the Law, and compares the figurative death of the high priest to the sacrifice of Christ. In verses 11 and 12, he says, "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Verse 24—28, "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world (kosmou); but now once in the end of the world (aionion) hath he appeared to put away sin, by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men (tois anthropois, the men) once to die, but after this the judgment (krisis), so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation." By the above, it is clearly seen that Paul was contrasting the death of the high priest with the death of Christ, and comparing the result of the priest's sacrifice with the result of Christ's sacrifice; both of which were justification, — the former for one year, the latter once for all. And as it is (in the Law dispensation) appointed unto the men (high priest) once to die (to die once a year), but after this the judgment (justification). It will be observed that the article in the original is prefixed to men, which is not in the English translation, but is prefixed to the word judgment, in which place it does not stand in the original text By also observing the comparatives, as and so, it is clear that the apostle meant as we have stated it. After the high priest had returned from the Holiest of all, having offered his gift, were not he, and the people also, justified in the sight of God for one year? The time cannot be named when the priest had acquitted himself in his office and offering before the Lord, but that the people and nation were actually judged, and in this judgment were acquitted, and actually stood justified before God for one year. Many appear to think that the word judgment necessarily implies condemnation; but in every legal and just judgment, those adjudged are either justified or condemned: in the above case we find they were adjudged to justification. Now, supposing we should admit the word "die," in the text, to mean literal death, and judgment, condemnation; we should then read it thus: As it is appointed to all men literally to die, but after death condemnation. The same all that die must receive the same sentence. The text says nothing about some being acquitted and others condemned. We read it thus: And as, under the Legal dispensation, it is appointed unto the high priest figuratively to die once the year, but after this, justification before God; so Christ was once offered a sacrifice for the many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without an offering for sin, unto their salvation. We see no other rational conclusion. There is no similarity, or reasonable comparison, between literal death and the sacrifice of Christ. The apostle could not have been so illogical in his comparison. But to say, As Legal justification followed the sin-offering of the high priest, even so deliverance and justification shall follow the offering of our Saviour, once for all, is perfectly consistent, logical, and conclusive. The apostle sanctions the above in the following. Chapter 10: 11—14, "And every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: but this man (Christ), after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." The high priest was typical of Christ, the antitype; the former was under the necessity of offering himself often, or yearly; but the latter, Christ, "now once in the end of the world (age) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."

In 2 Peter 2: 4, and in Jude 6, we have another account of God's judgment. Peter says, "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell (tartarosas), and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment" (krisin). Jude says, "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." By observing the reading of these two passages and their connection, it will be seen they both allude to the same time and thing. Peter speaks of false teachers, and those who followed their damnable heresies, as bringing upon themselves swift destruction, and whose damnation slumbereth not. Jude speaks of the same characters, who denied the Lord God and the Lord Jesus Christ. They both labor to show the certainty of punishment, or reward of wrong doing, in which effort they bring in the angels (messengers), which sinned and kept not their first estate, &c. Now, observe, they immediately connect with the transaction of these angels, or messengers, the circumstance of Egypt, Sodom and Gomorrah, of filthy dreamers, the punishment of the old world, &c., as though they were all connected — of a like kind — in the same state of being — this world, &c. Here we remark, that they could have had reference to no other than the twelve messengers chosen from the twelve tribes of Israel to search the land of Canaan. See Numb. 13: 1—4. Each tribe furnished a man, a ruler among them, which were sent from the wilderness of Paran. But, ten of these heads and rulers in Israel, who were sent on this important message, proved traitors, were not true to their trust, brought a false report of the land they searched, and caused the people to murmur against Moses and Aaron. In consequence of these evils, they were visited by a judgment in the form of a plague. Those messengers who sinned in bringing the false report were cast down from their dignified state as rulers, and were bound in chains of darkness, obscurity, and wretchedness, mingling with the rebellious and murmuring class in deep disgrace. In this degrading condition they were held until the judgment of the great day overtook them. See Numb. 14: 37, "Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land died by the plague before the Lord." This was the tartaros, hell, which those angels, or messengers, were thrust into, and their tragical death closes with them the scene of judgment.

2 Tim. 4: 1, "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Paul here alludes to the judgment and calamity which was about to fall on the Jewish nation. Peter speaks of the same in 1 Peter 4: 5, "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead." In Acts 10: 42, we find that Christ "was ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and dead." Now, when these texts were written, this judgment was near at hand. Christ was ready to judge — it was near by — about to come upon them. If it should be asked, What is meant by the phrase, quick and dead? we reply — By the expression quick and dead might have been meant Jew and Gentile, as distinguishing the former, who had received the oracles of God, from the latter, who were dead to that light. But, more strictly we think the phrase quick and dead signifies the believer and unbeliever, the righteous and unrighteous, the obedient and disobedient — all were judged promiscuously and collectively, but every one agreeably to his merit or demerit. Nothing is said about the resurrection, or eternity, in the text or its connection; but the morally dead, and the morally living, were evidently meant. Paul says, Eph. 2: 1, "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." Verse 5, "Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." By this, we see, the unbelieving and disobedient are called dead. The believing and obedient are the quickened, and in the judgment referred to they were acquitted of evil; while the former were driven away in their wickedness, to share the wretchedness of that calamitous time.

Peter, in his 2d Epistle, speaks of the same time, the close of the Jewish polity, and their national death. 2 Peter 3: 7, "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Peter, firstly, reminds his brethren of what the prophets and themselves had previously informed them should come; of scoffers that should appear in the last days, and of the world which perished by water. But the heavens and the earth, which now are, are kept in store by the same word; reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Now, by referring to Section VIII., Chapter I., it will be seen that the last day, last times, &c., point directly, not only to the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, expressed in this text, but also to the day or time of God's wrath and retribution at the close of the Jewish age. The judgment in the text is identified with the above period. Some may suppose that the heavens and earth, which now are, being reserved unto fire, &c., may allude to the destruction of the material heavens and earth; but we find no evidence of this, either from the text or any other scripture authority. The ecclesiastical heavens and earth are what is here alluded to. Observe the expressions of the prophet. Mal. 3: 1—3, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver" &c. The prophet here had the same time and judgment in view of which Peter speaks. Christ was the messenger and judge who sat upon the throne of his glory in power, over the wreck and fall of expiring Jerusalem. Malachi calls him the messenger of the covenant who shall come; but, "who shall abide the day of his coming?" By this, we see it was a day of trial and affliction. In chap. 4: 1, he says, "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." This clearly illustrates Peter's day of judgment and fire, unto which the ecclesiastical heavens and earth were reserved. When the unclean, impure, and abominable were consumed, then would be left the obedient, who feared his name, and had made their escape from the scene of impending ruin. Such were adjudged worthy of life; and, upon such, this same Judge, who sat in fire, will spread his balmy wings as the Sun of righteousness, who will heal their infirmities, and continue to shine as a wall of fire round about them, and a glory in their midst. Peter, in connection with the text, says, "The Lord is long suffering to us-ward." Showing that the Lord was then procrastinating, deferring the time, about to burst upon them. In verses 10—12, he says, "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth, also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat?"

What can we understand by Peter's question and declaration here, more or less than this: — that he expected that consuming day of fire and convulsion would actually transpire during the literal lives of his brethren to whom he then wrote? He says, "Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, the heavens pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with a fervent heat, the earth, also, and the works therein, be burned up, what manner of persons ought ye to be..... looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God?" If this language does not imply, and explicitly teach, the then sudden coming and destruction of the things referred to, it can mean nothing; and the apostle had better been silent, than to have been tingling the ears of his brethren with a mere empty sound. But it is clear to every observer that the time was then at hand. In verse 13, the apostle says, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Nevertheless — that is, notwithstanding this ordeal by fire is soon to be upon us, yet we — who? — the apostle and his brethren, look for new heavens and a new earth. Some of them then living, it was expected, would see the time gone by when there should be new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. The new heavens and new earth looked for were undoubtedly the established orders of Christ's kingdom on earth, when previous rites and ceremonies should have fully passed away. And should it still be objected that the heavens and earth, which were to be destroyed, must be the literal heavens and earth, because they were contrasted with the old world that perished by water, we have only to cite them to verses 5 and 6, "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water, and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished." Now, we ask, what heavens and earth, or what world, was destroyed? Surely not the literal heavens or earth! but simply the inhabitants, with their rites and customs. The same material earth yet stands; but men, with all their works, were swept away and lost in oblivion. The same is measurably true of the latter. In reality, we know not how long the vacuum has been lit up by the starry worlds, or even how long the earth has continued to roll; much less do we know how long it will hold its age, and continue its stated course, at the rate of sixty-eight thousand miles an hour. See Chapter IX.

John, in Rev. 20: 12, 13, speaks of a judgment, which undoubtedly is the same as above referred to. John says, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell (hades) delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works." So much has been said, and ably said and written upon this subject, that we deem it unnecessary to say, at least, but little here. On taking a retrospective view of the subject, with its connection, and with the book itself, we learn nothing which induces us to suppose that any allusion is made to a judgment in eternity; neither can this possibly be. We have already shown that God judges men in the earth — in this world — and the Scriptures cannot be broken. If God had designed to judge men in eternity, we think he would have made it plain in his instructions on the subject; but he has nowhere informed us he would do so. Judgment and the resurrection stand nowhere connected in the Bible; neither would there then be a place for judgment, or a judge to decide. from the fact that Christ's reign is confined to his kingdom on earth, and he the only judge, and at the resurrection he delivers up the kingdom, resigns his office, as mediator and judge, to God the Father, that he may be all in all. See 1 Cor. 15: 24—28. Hence, we are not under the necessity of looking to any other place, for the judgment in our text, than to the earth itself. John informs us, in the first verse, of an angel which came down from heaven. He laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, the devil and satan, bound him, cast him into the bottomless pit, shut him up, &c. We must here remember that this devil and pit are both on the earth; for the angel found the devil here after he came down from heaven; and he does not inform us that he went with him to any other place, to cast him into the pit and shut him up. What is said, in verse 4, of the souls of them that were beheaded, and should reign with Christ a thousand years, Dr. Whitby and others do not understand as signifying men literally raised from the dead; but that the church is here signified in a flourishing condition for a thousand years after the conversion of the Jews, and the gathering in of all nations to them thus converted to the Christian faith. Verses 7—9 inform us that when the thousand years are expired Satan shall be loosed out of his prison; he was to go out to deceive the nations in the four quarters of the earth; they went up on the breadth of the earth, compassed the camp of the saints about..... and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them. Here we notice that the thousand years, and all the following transpiring events, are declared to take place on the earth. Even the beast and the false prophet are to be tormented day and night, with the devil and all that he deceived Thus we see that the scene of this judgment is on the earth, where day and night diversify time and number the rolling years. What is said, in the 9th verse, of fire from heaven which devoured them, and in the 10th and 11th verses, of Him that sat on the throne, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away, &c., is already explained in the remarks on 2 Peter 3 : 7. In verse 11 he says, "And I saw a great white throne." When did he see it? At the same time when the preceding events took place. Verse 1, he says, "And I saw an angel," &c. In verse 4, "I saw thrones." All these scenes transpired in the vision at the same time, and evidently allude to the close of the Jewish polity, the burning up, and passing away of their religious and political heavens and earth. Thus, the Jewish heaven and earth passed away to make room for the new, which are now established under the Gospel.

In the 12th verse we find the same copulative which connects and identifies what follows with the preceding events. "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." The time when these dead stood before God, and were judged according to their works, is already identified. But it may be further illustrated by Matt. 16. 27, 28, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." These texts show that the time was when Christ should set upon the throne of his glory with his angels, when every man should be rewarded according to his works, and during the literal existence of some then living. This is the time when the kingdom of God should come with power. It is the time when the dead, small and great, stood before God, in the same sense that all nations stood before him, in the parable of the sheep and goats, Matt. 25 : 32 (see in this work). It appears to have been a common expression in those days, when things of importance were attended to, to use the phrase "before the Lord," or "before God." It was said of Zacharias and Elizabeth, that they were righteous before God. Luke 1 : 6. And Paul charged Timothy, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, to preach the word. 2 Tim. 4 : 1 Moses said to the children of Israel : "Ye stand this day, all of you, before the Lord your God." And when any calamity, in the form of a judgment, came upon the people, they were said to stand before God, as in the instance of our text. And as this language of our text is all highly figurative, we do not expect to find the literally dead before God; but moral death is the state the mass of the Jews, and nations then before him, were in. They were dead in iniquity and disobedience, dead to all their best privileges and interests, and about to expire in a complete national sense. We have before shown that this scene was on the earth, and in that generation. But further to illustrate, see Matt. 25 : 32, "And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." The prophet also identifies the same thing. See Zech. 14 : 1, 2, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken." See, also, Matt. 23 : 36, and 24 : 34, where the same event is described. "Verily I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation." . . . . "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." And as further illustration of the assemblage before God, the books being opened, and the judgment according to their works, see Dan. 7 : 9, 10. "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool : his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him : thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him : the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Chap. 12 : 1, 2, "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people : and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time : and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

The above passages so nearly resemble Rev. 20, and so fully illustrate our subject, that little more need be said. What is said, in the 13th verse, of the sea, and death and hell, delivering up the dead which were in them, is only a refiguring of the same things. Thus were they all before God, who sat upon his throne in spirit and in power over Jerusalem, which was called his throne. See Jer. 3 : 17, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord: and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem." The books which were opened, and out of which they were judged, could have been nothing more than the law and the prophets, which contained those awful denunciations against them. Christ says to the Jews, "There is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust." John 5 : 45. He also says, John 12 : 48, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him : the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." The other book, called the book of life, was undoubtedly the principles of the gospel, which all those who were adjudged to life had embraced. They were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. This is true to the letter of all judgments on earth, but could not be of a judgment after the resurrection, because there is then but one infinite result, which cannot be the reward or effect of earthly and limited performances. Those who believed, and had their names enrolled with the Christian believers in the book of life, escaped the furious tornado of death and destruction into which the disobedient and unbelieving were thrust, as into a lake of fire, which is the second death. This second death is the tragical end and ruin of that people as a race and nation.

It may be objected that the book of Revelation was not written until after the destruction of Jerusalem. We know there are different opinions; but the best authorities, we think, show to the contrary. The inscription to this book in the Syrian Version, published by De Diew, 1627, and afterwards in the London Polyglot, is the following : "The revelation which God made to John the Evangelist, in the Isle of Patmos, to which he was banished by Nero Cæsar." This places it previous to the year 68, at which time the reign of Galba commenced. That this was the true time of John's banishment, and, consequently, that the visions recorded in this book are to be ascribed to this period, is contended by many learned and eminent writers, among whom are Hentenius, Harduin

Grotius, Lightfoot, Hammond, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, and others. But we think the book itself shows that it was written before the overthrow of Jerusalem. In chap. 1: 1, it is said, that "God taught John by his angel things that must shortly come to pass." Verse 3, it is said, "The time is at hand." Chap. 22: 6, 7, it is said, that "The Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." Verse 10, "And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand." Verse 12, "And behold, I come quickly: and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Verse 20, "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

That the above passages show the then future, yet sudden coming of our Lord, we think is self-evident. The following, we think, show that Jerusalem was then standing. Chap. 1: 7, "Behold, he cometh with clouds: and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." This corresponds with Matt. 24: 30, "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." That this relates to the destruction of Jerusalem none will dispute. It was to take place in that generation. See verse 34, "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Rev. 11: 1, 2, "And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given to the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." Compare this with Luke 21: 24, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." See Rev. 11: 8, "And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." This time was then future. He says, their dead bodies shall lie in the streets of the city, &c., where our Lord was crucified." Where was our Lord crucified, save in Jerusalem?

The 18th chapter evidently alludes to Jerusalem In verse 8 it is said, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Dr. Clarke says this passage means, "They shall mourn because of the slaughter and the famine, the fruits of their fields being utterly destroyed or burned by their enemies." See Deut. 32: 22—25, "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell (sheol) and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundation of the mountains. . . . . They shall be burned with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction. . . . . The sword without, and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also, with the man of gray hairs."

The above can be said of no other city. Rome pagan has never been thus treated; only some parts of her were burnt with fire. Rome papal has not been thus treated; but it is true of Jerusalem. In chap. 18: 24, it is said, "And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." To what place will the above language apply so properly as to Jerusalem? Christ says, "For it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." Again, we hear him exclaiming to its devoted inhabitants, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee!" Well might the Saviour declare unto them that upon them should come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth. We might multiply instances to show the internal evidence of the book itself that Jerusalem was the devoted city in question, and was standing when the book was written; which period, as before stated, was previous to the year 68. Jerusalem was destroyed about the year 70. Thus, as we have seen, the time, when the book was written, was at hand.

The foregoing statements, we think, must be satisfactory to every candid mind. And should an objector say that Jerusalem was destroyed previous to the writing of the book, we reply, that John recorded things which had been, then were, and should be thereafter. See Rev. 1: 19, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."

Hence, whether it were before or after, the objector would have the same difficulty in showing that Jerusalem was not the scene and theatre of action referred to. We also notice that John saw "the dead stand before God." In the resurrection, people cannot be dead. They will then have been raised from death to life. "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." See Matt. 22: 30; Luke 20: 36; and 1 Cor. 15: 42—44.

On the Greek terms krino, krima, krisis, &c., we remark, that these words nowhere signify endless misery, or damnation, in a future state of existence. We find no place in the Bible where their signification extends beyond this state of existence. Their strict signification appears to be simply this: First, a judgment; a resolution; a decision; a sentence; a condemnation; a penalty. See Krima. Second, separation; discrimination; choice; decision; judgment; the decision, or final issue; the crisis of a distemper. See Krisis. Or, third, to separate; to put asunder; to discriminate; to cull; to select; to choose; hence to form a judgment, opinion or decision; to examine; to criticize; to judge; to decide a difference; to give a verdict; to pass sentence; to inquire; to confirm; to ratify, &c.—See Krino, Donnegan's Greek and English Lexicon. New work, pp. 778–9. It will be seen in Section III., this Chapter, that their renderings, though various, agree with the above definitions given. The same words that are rendered judge, judging, judgment, &c., are also rendered damned, condemnation, damnation, &c. Inasmuch, then, as the same words are rendered judgment and damnation, they cannot, intrinsically, signify a decision or judgment to endless misery in any case; for, if they necessarily imply it in the one, they also must, of necessity, imply it in the other; and we should then be under the necessity of reading the following passages thus: "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment (krisin, endless misery) upon all." Now, we think, no one is willing to read the Scriptures in this manner, which would prove universal damnation, or damnation to all; yet, upon the premises laid down, we must of necessity do so; for it is the same word which occurs in Matt. 23: 33, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers! how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Damnation, in this text, is supposed to imply endless misery. Again, we must read 1 Peter 4: 17, thus: "For the time is come that judgment (krima, endless misery) must begin at the house of God." This same word, krima, is rendered at least eight times damnation in the New Testament, and is supposed to teach the doctrine of endless misery. But, if so, then woe to "the house of God"! For Peter says, "The time is come that krima must begin there." But that this word, or any other in the Bible, teaches endless misery, cannot be sustained. They do not of themselves naturally imply it, neither are they prefixed to any word or phrase in the Bible that does teach it. They simply show a decision in judgment; which is either condemnation on the one hand, or justification on the other, agreeably to the merit or demerit of those adjudged. For further illustrations on these words, see on the words damned, damnation, &c., in this work.

We have, in Section I., this Chapter, so arranged the scripture passages as to show, first, the manner in which God judges his creatures; second, the time when, and place where, God judges them; and, in the third place, we have noticed sundry passages which speak of judgment. We now ask the candid reader to honestly decide for himself whether the judgments of God are not all executed in the earth, and in no other place? Whether men must not reap in the same field where they sow, instead of sowing in one field and reaping in another? Whether "the judgment-seat (bematos) of Christ" is not in this world, rather than in another? (See Rom. 14: 10; 2 Cor. 5: 10.) And whether Christ's kingdom on earth does not confine his reign of judgment to the gospel period? And, when that shall close, whether there will be a place for judgment or a judge to decide? When this is carefully, candidly and honestly done, we have no fears as to the result.

CHAPTER VII.

ON THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

SECTION I

All the passages in the NEW TESTAMENT which speak of the SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

Matt. 10 : 23. But when they persecute you (the apostles) in this city, flee ye into another : for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come.

Matt. 16 : 27, 28. For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels ; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom.

Mark 8 : 38. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.

Mark 9 : 1. And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.

Luke 9 : 26, 27. For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels. But I tell you of a truth, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God.

Matt. 24 : 3. And as he (Christ) sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be. and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world ? (End of aionos — age, or dispensation.)

Mark 13 : 3, 4. And as he (Christ) sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, Tell us, when shall these things be ? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled ? (His coming, and end of the age.)

Luke 21 : 5—7. And as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he (Christ) said, As for these things which ye behold, the days will come in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. And they (his disciples) asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass? (The destruction of the temple, and end of the world, or age.)

Matt. 24 : 29—35. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken ; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven ; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree ; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh : so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away (The parallel passages in Mark 13 : 28—31.)

Verse 39. And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

Verse 44. Therefore be ye also ready : for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh.

Mark 13 : 28—31. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree : When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near : so ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, That this generation shall not pass till all these things be done. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. Parallels in Luke 21 : 27—32. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable ; Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees ; when they now shoot forth, ye see, and know of your own selves, that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Matt. 25 : 13. Watch, therefore ; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.

Matt. 25 : 31—34. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory : and before him shall be gathered all nations ; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats : and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

Verse 41. Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.

Verse 46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment : but the righteous into life eternal.

Luke 12 : 40. Be ye, therefore, ready also ; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

Luke 17 : 22—24. And he said unto the disciples, The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it. And they shall say to you, See here ! or see there ! go not after them, nor follow them. For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of Man be in his day (his coming).

2 Thess. 1 : 6—10. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power : when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

2 Tim. 4 : 1. I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom.

Matt. 26 : 64. Jesus saith unto him (the high priest), Thou hast said : nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

John 14 : 3. And if I go, and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself ; that where I am, there ye may be also.

Verse 28. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye love me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father : for my Father is greater than I.

John 21 : 22. Jesus saith unto him (Peter), If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee ? follow thou me.

1 Cor. 11 : 26. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come.

Phil. 1 : 6. Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day (coming) of Jesus Christ.

Verse 10. That ye (saints at Philippi) may approve things that are excellent : that ye may be sincere, and without offence, till the day (coming) of Christ.

Phil. 2 : 16. Holding forth the word of life ; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ (coming, &c).

1 Cor. 1 : 7, 8. So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

1 Tim. 6 : 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

James 5 : 7, 8. Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient ; establish your hearts : for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

1 Thess. 1 : 10. And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

1 Thess. 2 : 19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing ? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming ?

1 Thess. 3 : 13. To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

1 Thess. 5 : 23. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly ; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

2 Thess. 3 : 5. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ (his coming).

2 Tim. 4 : 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day ; and not to me only, but unto all them, also, that love his appearing.

Titus 2 : 13, 14. Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

Heb. 10 : 25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is ; but exhorting one another ; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.

Verse 37. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

1 Peter 1 : 7. That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Verse 13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

1 Peter 4 : 12, 13. Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you ; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings ; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

2 Thess. 2 : 1, 2. Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

Heb. 9 : 26—28. For then must he (Christ) often have suffered since the foundation of the world (kosmou, the earth) ; but now once in the end of the world (aionon, age) hath he appeared to put away sin, by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men (the men) once to die, but after this the judgment (krisis, judgment or decision) ; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many ; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

1 John 2 : 28. And now, little children, abide in him ; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

2 Peter 1 : 16. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty.

1 Thess. 5 : 1—4. But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you : for yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child ; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

2 Peter 3 : 3—15. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming ? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water, and in the water ; whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished ; but the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless; and account that the long-sufferings of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you.

Jude 1: 14, 15. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh, with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

Rev. 1: 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds: and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him.

Verse 3. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand.

Rev. 2: 25. But that which ye have already, hold fast till I come.

Rev. 6: 12—17. And I beheld, when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood: and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind: and the heaven departed as a scroll, when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?

Rev. 16: 13—15. And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and that keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

Rev. 22: 7—12. Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book. And I, John, saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book worship God. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book ; for the time is at hand. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still ; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still ; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still ; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And behold, I come quickly ; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

Verse 20. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly: Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

SECTION II.

Those passages which are generally supposed to refer to Christ's FINAL COMING at the Resurrection of the Dead.

John 14 : 3. And if I go, and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself ; that where I am, there ye may be also.

Acts 1 : 10, 11. And while they (his disciples) looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel ; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven ? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Phil. 3 : 20, 21. For our conversation is in heaven ; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself.

1 John 3 : 2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God ; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be : but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him ; for we shall see him as he is.

1 Thess. 4 : 13—17. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God : and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air : and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

1 Cor. 15 : 21—26. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order : Christ the first fruits ; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father ; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

1 Cor. 15 : 51, 52. Behold, I show you a mystery ; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump ; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

SECTION III.

Closing Remarks on the Coming of Christ.

By a careful perusal of the above texts, it will be seen that they not only teach the coming of Christ, but that they speak of him as coming, expressly and designedly, for the purpose of executing justice and judgment in the earth. And by comparing the texts on the coming of Christ with those which teach the judgment and end of the world, it will be readily acknowledged that they all stand immediately connected, and all teach the same thing. The same is equally true of those texts which speak of the last day, last times, great day, &c. Whenever and wherever the coming of Christ is mentioned in the Bible (as in Section I., this Chapter), that coming is immediately connected with judgment, which is to be executed in accordance with the works of the creature; according to the deeds done, &c. From the foregoing facts it appears evident that these four different classes of texts — namely, on the judgment, end of the world, last days, and the coming of Christ — are all nearly related, and signify the same thing. Hence we come to the conclusion that the coming of Christ (as taught in these passages) merely signifies his coming to close the legal dispensation, to establish the gospel, and execute justice and judgment in the earth.

But as there are various opinions respecting the coming of Christ, and the object of his coming, we will briefly notice the different periods, as they are taught in the Bible.

The first appearance of Christ in the world, so far as we have any knowledge, was his appearance in the flesh, as an infant of days. This coming was predicted by the prophets of God, as the introduction of Messiah on earth.

His second appearance must have been in spirit and in power, to the overthrow of his enemies, the destruction of their city, and the final close of legal rites and ceremonies. This coming was not only foretold by the prophets, but pointedly declared by Christ himself. He declared to his disciples, and the people, that the coming of the Son of Man with power should take place during that generation. See Matt. 16: 27, 28; 25: 30—34; Mark 8: 38, and 9: 1. This is the coming referred to in the first section of this chapter and which stands immediately connected with judgment in the earth

The only place in the Scriptures where the numeral, second, is prefixed to the time of Christ's coming, is in Heb. 9 : 28, where the apostle words it thus : "Unto them that look for him (Christ) shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." Paul, in this chapter, compares the sacrifice of the high priest, under the law dispensation, with the offering of Christ; and, in conclusion, says, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." We have already noticed these passages, in our remarks on the judgment, which see. We will, however, briefly notice them here, by giving them their proper reading. "And, as under the Law dispensation it is appointed unto the high priest to die once the year, and, after this, judgment to justification, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of the many; and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without a sin offering, unto salvation." When Paul wrote this epistle to the Hebrews, Christ had not made his second appearance. The time, however, was then near at hand. The apostle and his brethren were looking for the sudden and powerful coming of Christ, to execute judgment upon that wicked and abandoned generation. The exhortations of the apostles, to their friends and others, show that they expected Christ's second approach. Paul reasoned of righteousness, of temperance, and of a judgment about to come. Peter could say, "The end of all things is at hand." And John says, "Little children, we know that it is the last times." And when Christ did make his appearance in power, without a sin offering, to the deliverance or salvation of those who looked for him, he, at the same time, was a consuming fire to his enemies.

Paul, in 2 Thess. 1 : 6—9, says, "Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This ordeal by fire was at Christ's second coming, and transpired about forty-one years after his resurrection. See remarks on the above passages in this work Christ warned his disciples to be on a look-out, to be ready; "For the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not." In the parable of the sheep and goats, Matt. 25, he describes the scene by showing the different conditions of the obedient and disobedient. To the one it is said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." To the other it is said, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." See Matt. 25 : 34—41.

The scenes above described were all to take place at the time when Christ made his second appearance on earth; when he delivered and rewarded the righteous, but cast off and punished the wicked.

Let it be here remembered that those scriptures which teach the judgment, the end of the world, or age, and the second coming of Christ, all stand connected, and allude to the same time and things; all of which are to take place on the earth, during the lifetime of men, and in strict accordance with their merit and demerit. We will also state that Dr. Macknight, Dr. Warburton, Bishop Newton, Dr. A. Clarke, and most others who have written on this subject, are unanimous in the opinion that what is strictly termed the second coming of Christ is a figurative coming, namely, in spirit or power; and that this took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, the abolition of the Jewish dispensation, and the establishment of the kingdom of heaven in the earth. That this opinion is correct, we think no well-informed mind will dispute. The words second time, in relation to this subject, occur in no other passage in the New Testament, excepting Heb. 9 : 28, and which are sufficient to fix the period, as above stated, beyond a rational doubt.

There are other passages, however, in the New Testament, which speak of the coming of Christ, as attended by different circumstances. In Section II., this Chapter, we have arranged those passages which appear to teach the resurrection of the dead, in connection with the personal appearance of our Saviour. The object of this (third) coming appears to be to raise the dead to a state of incorruption, immortality and glory.

The first passage we have noticed at the head of this class of scriptures, is John 14 : 3. In the preceding verse Christ says to his disciples, "In my Father's house there are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." Then adds, "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." In the 28th verse he says, "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you." These expressions appear to imply that as he was then personally with them, he would in person leave them, and come again in like manner. In Acts 1: 10, 11, it is said, "As he (Jesus) went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." These expressions positively show that as our Saviour in person left the world, so he in person (in like manner) would return to it again. That Christ has already made his appearance on earth in power, which appearance was called his second coming, we have already shown. But his appearance in person, as above described, is not as yet made manifest. Hence we must look for another, and a personal coming, of our Saviour on earth. This is the only remaining coming of Christ for which we are authorized to look or expect. We are informed of no other. And here let it be strictly borne in mind that this personal and third coming of our Saviour stands nowhere connected either with judgment or rewards and punishments. The class of texts which teach this last coming identifies it as standing immediately connected with the raising of the dead. Paul encourages his Philippian brethren, by informing them that Christ (for whom they looked from heaven) should change their vile bodies, that they might be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. John says, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 3: 2. Paul, 1 Thess. 4: 13—17, says "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (or hinder the rising of) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first (that is, the dead shall rise before the living do). Then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

These passages teach, firstly, that, at the time these instructions were given, Christ was actually in heaven, his risen state. This Paul affirms in Heb. 9: 24, "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Christ was exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour; he has set down at the right hand of God, having obtained eternal redemption for us. He has ascended to his Father, and is now seated on the throne of righteousness, as mediator and judge of all the earth. From this throne, by his word and spirit, he administers justice and judgment in the earth. This mediatorial throne, or seat, is also his judgment-seat; and from this throne he is represented, in the spirit and power of the gospel, as seated in judgment before the world. Hence the propriety of Paul's expression, 2 Cor. 5: 10, "For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things in body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." In this manner Christ sits, in the spirit and power of gospel truth, judging the world in righteousness; and under this gospel administration every one receives according to that he hath done, whether good or bad. Upon this throne Christ will remain, as mediator and judge, until the great work of reconciling the world to God is accomplished. Hence Peter, in speaking of Christ, says, "Whom the heaven must receive, until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 21. Paul has similar language in Col. 1: 20, "And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) by him to reconcile all things to himself: by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." The same apostle has said, in 1 Cor. 15: 25, 26, "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." From these testimonies we learn that Christ will keep his position as mediator and judge until he hath subdued and reconciled all things to himself: until he hath finished sin, made an end of transgression, and destroyed the last enemy, death. When all this shall have been accomplished, then will have arrived the period when the sleeping millions of our race, in connection with the living multitudes, shall all realize the resuscitating power of Him who is "the resurrection and the life." Then will "the Lord himself descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God" — not to destroy his enemies, or to execute judgment, but to arouse the living and the dead to a state of immortal and unending bliss. When he shall make this personal and last appearance on earth, he will have previously closed his process as mediator and judge, will have subdued and reconciled all to himself, and then only remains to raise and deliver up to God his Father the ransomed world, with his own subjection to him, that God may then be all and in all.

When Christ made his second appearance, he is represented as sitting on the throne of his glory, establishing his kingdom, and commencing his reign on earth. But altogether different is the object of his third or last coming. Then his work will be finished; the judgment day closed, and the kingdom, which he received of his Father at the commencement of his reign, ready to be resigned back to him, the Great Father and God of all.

In the second place, these scriptures confirm what we have already stated. John says, "But we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." This likeness to Christ is effected by the resurrection. See 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." To the Thessalonians, he says, "Them, also, which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." "The dead in Christ shall rise first (before the living are changed). Then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Paul undoubtedly wished to have his brethren believe that their departed friends would all rise again to life and happiness; that death was not one long, eternal sleep, as many of his countrymen actually believed; he, therefore, labors to convince them that Christ, their risen head would raise the human family from the sleep of death, that one and all should again meet together, and be forever with the Lord.

He informs his Corinthian brethren that the trumpet should sound, and the dead be raised incorruptible; and that the living should be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the last trump.

That Paul believed (not in a partial but) in a universal resurrection to holiness and happiness, is evident from 1 Cor. 15: 22, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." All must admit that Adam is the constituent and federal head of the human family. In him all, individually, die. It is also equally admissible, that the same all shall be made alive in Christ. The words, even so, imply that the same all who die in Adam shall, equally and individually, be made alive in Christ, their spiritual head and representative. Man is created "in the image of God." "Christ is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person." Hence, being created in the image of God, we are created in Christ Jesus, as our moral or spiritual head. "The head of every man is Christ." 1 Cor. 11: 3. Consequently, Christ is as truly the moral head of every man, as is Adam our earthly head. And Christ will as certainly reinstate and immortalize every man in himself, as it is certain that in Adam all are fallen.

But to this it is objected, because of the expression in the 23d verse, where it is said, "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Some suppose "every man in his own order," means (in fact, we have heard it in a sermon) he that dies a sinner, shall be raised a sinner; he that dies a drunkard, shall be raised a drunkard; and he that dies a murderer, shall be raised a murderer, &c. But to this objection we reply, first, in the language of the apostle. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." All are made alive in Christ. Therefore, "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new." 2 Cor. 5: 17. From this it appears, that those who are in Christ are actually new creatures; old things are done away, and all things become new. Hence, when all are made alive in him, they must, of necessity, all be new creatures old things—that is, sin, all their former vices, evil habits, bad practices, &c. — are all done away, annihilated, and gone: the creature is changed, and bears the image of Christ. Hence, Paul says, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." 1 Cor. 15: 49. By these facts we learn that all in the earthy image of Adam die, and that the same all (in the resurrection) will be made alive in the heavenly image of Christ. Consequently, all that can be understood by "every man in his own order," is, merely, every man in his own time (or class), and in his own identity. "Christ the first fruits," — that is, Christ as the first fruits of the resurrection, rose first in his own time, and own individual being; "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming," — that is, when Christ comes to raise the dead, all will then be made alive in Him, but every one in his own identity, or as himself, in his own individual being. Hence, in verse 38, "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." We think the expression, "But every man in his own order," applies with the same force to those who die, as to those who are made alive. "For as in Adam all die," — that is, not collectively and simultaneously, but every one in his own time and identity, as himself. Thus we die as ourselves, and we shall be made alive as ourselves, and in the time classed or set off.

But supposing our objector should urge his theory, what would the result then be? He says, if one dies a sinner, he will be raised a sinner, &c. Now, admitting this self-contradictory theory to be carried out, and the result would be this: every sinner (having died as such), from the period of mother Eve down to the resurrection morn, must be called up from their tombs with the same characters, propensities, appetites, and passions which they possessed when they went down to their graves. And how is this? Why, sinners, liars, extortioners, thieves, drunkards, murderers, and all as such, must be made alive in Christ; forming parts and parcels of that one body, of which Christ is the head. What kind of a body such would be, and what would be the result, we leave for our opponents to determine.

Should we admit that any in the resurrection would be raised in any other condition than alive in Christ, new creatures, fitted for holiness and happiness in him, we destroy, not only the utility, but every object of the resurrection. The apparent and only object of the resurrection is, to immortalize and happify the ransomed world of sentient beings, to carry out God's original design, and perfect the work of his own hands. Who will deny the original purpose of God, in ultimately imparting a share of his own perfections to his creatures? He hath said, "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Isa. 46: 9, 10. To say that this purpose and pleasure of God will fail is infidelity. To say that God designed a happy end for one, and misery as an end for another, is still worse. See James 3: 17, "The wisdom that is from above . . . . is without partiality and without hypocrisy." Ps. 145: 9, "The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works." And should we contend that the creature himself, or any other being in the universe of God, will frustrate or defeat his pleasurable purpose and designed end, it would be blasphemous. God is one infinite, holy, undivided being. All wisdom, power, and goodness, are his, and Love is his nature. Man can effect his physical and moral good, by obeying the laws which God has established to govern those principles. But there are no means by which the creature can effect his own resurrection or immortal condition. This exclusively and only belongs to God. It is not only his prerogative to accomplish it, but his word, his nature, and his oath, bind him to effect it for his creatures. Amen.

A belief of anything short of universal holiness and happiness in the resurrection state would not only dishonor God, but it must destroy all happiness and consolation in the creature. None can rejoice in that faith which tells of an introduction of feeling, sentient beings into a state of unending woe, pain, and death! And much less could they rejoice when they reflect that such end is the result of this unasked-for existence, and the pleasure of God declared from the beginning! Yet it is a fact which cannot be denied, that the end of man (whatever it may be) is, and will be such, and such only, as God designed, even from the beginning. But, as we have already seen that the purposes of God are good, that the end is life in Christ, we find no reason for mourning or lamenting the purposes of God; but we rejoice "that his counsel will stand, and he will do all his pleasure."

risen from the dead, and is declared to effect the resurrection of man. Paul, after asserting that, "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive;" and after declaring that Jesus must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet, and destroyed death, the last enemy; and that, "when all things shall be subdued to Christ, then shall the Son also himself be subject to him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all," he treats more directly of the nature and consequences of the resurrection; and, after speaking of the different glories of the sun, moon, and stars, says, "So, also, is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15: 42—44. He further says, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law: but thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Verses 53—57. Here is our victory, and the foundation of our hopes. The apostle has here given a lively description of the closing scene of Christ's mission on earth. This will be the final consummation of God's eternal purpose; "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him." Then all who have died in Adam will be made alive in Christ. Then shall the "creation itself be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Then sin and death will be forever destroyed; tears shall be wiped from all faces; sorrow and sighing shall have a perpetual end; and the ransomed world shall sing, "Blessing and honor, glory and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever."

We have noticed those passages which we think have an important bearing upon the subject of the resurrection. It may be supposed, by some, that we have omitted passages that have an immediate connection with the subject; and, by others, that John 5: 29, speaks of a resurrection, which ought to have been noticed. But to the last we reply, that Christ had no allusion to a literal resurrection in this text. In verse 25, he speaks of a death in which the unbelieving Jews were involved; and, in the 28th verse, he represents those, thus involved, as being "in the graves;" verse 29, that they "shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." The time alluded to is the time of Jerusalem's sad catastrophe. See Daniel 12: 1—3, and Matt. 24: 21, also, 16: 27, 28, all of which speak of, and identify the time here referred to. The resurrection is a figurative one, showing the waking up, and calling forth, from the moral graves of sin and rebellion, that nation and people to a sense of what they were, and where they were. See Ezek. 37: 12, 13, "Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people and brought you up out of your graves." In Dan. 12: 2, it is said that they shall awake from the dust of the earth, "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." In the text it is said, "And they shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." Let it here be borne in mind, that they all come forth, in this rising, the one who has done good, unto life; the other, who has done evil, unto damnation. Here they receive in proportion to their merit or demerit. The hour was then coming, and soon did it overtake them — even in that generation. Matt. 16: 28. The word anastasin, here rendered resurrection, simply signifies the act of rising from a sitting or reclining posture, from a seat or the ground, a rising up, a starting up, &c. See Donnegan's Lexicon. The word is here applied to the calling forth of the Jews from a state of lethargy and moral death, as we have before shown. See on the judgment, and other places in this work.

SECTION II.

General Remarks on the phrases THAT DAY, LAST DAY, LAST DAYS, LAST TIMES, GREAT DAY, DAY OF WRATH, etc.

It will be seen that the word day, in the Scriptures, is used in a variety of ways to denote any given time or period, either definite or indefinite. But where it has the definite article, or any defining word, prefixed to define and limit its meaning, we must of necessity look to the context, or general subject of discourse, to learn its meaning. In the commencement of the preceding section of passages it will be seen that the day of temptation to the Jews in the wilderness is referred to. In the quotations from Zechariah it will be seen that the phrase that day is limited and confined to the day or kingdom of Christ, which was then future. And in the quotation from John 16 : 26, that day alludes to the same period. Also, chap. 8 : 56, the phrase my day has the same limits. Under the phrases last day, last days, &c., it will be seen, in the quotations from Isa. 2 : 2, and Micah 4 : 1, that the phrase last days has special reference to the close of the Legal dispensation, when the Jewish rites and ceremonies, with all their national privileges, were about to be closed, and a new order of things established. Peter has clearly defined the time, and illustrated the events, in Acts 2 : 16, 20, "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel, And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh : and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams : and on my servants, and on my handmaidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit ; and they shall prophesy : and I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath, blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke : the sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come." Peter evidently understood the prophet, whose words he quoted, to have had allusion to the time and scenes which were then passing; the winding up of the Jewish polity and tragedies as a nation, and the planting of the Gospel standard in its stead. This is the same time of trouble and calamity referred to in our remarks on the judgment and destruction of Jerusalem: viz., the introduction of Gospel principles, and the burning up or removing of those things which were, to the utter overthrow and destruction of their city and temple. With regard to the signs which should be presented, the lights of heaven being darkened, turned to blood, &c., we have no doubt but that they are generally understood to signify the fall and ruin of cities, nations, kingdoms, &c. It appears to have been the custom of the prophets to make use of the like metaphorical expressions to signify the fall or overthrow of any people or nation. See Isa. 13: 9, 10, and Ezek. 32: 7, 8. Isaiah is portraying the overthrow of Babylon; Ezekiel, the fearful fall of Egypt; and, in both instances, the same figure of expression is brought to show their downfall which is used to show the destruction of Jerusalem. And in describing the overthrow of Idumea, we think, if possible, still stronger language is used. Isa. 34: 4—6, "And all the hosts of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their hosts shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood," &c. By these strong expressions being used by the prophets to show the fall and end of earthly beings and things, we must not expect to find anything more taught, by like expressions, in the New Testament. Such expressions are nowhere used in the Bible to signify the end of the earth or material universe; but often to show the fall and end of kings, emperors, cities, &c. Peter, in his 2d epistle, chap. 3: 12, says, "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." This can mean no more than the burning up of the Jewish combustibles, and the end of that age, which is precisely what is meant by Joel, as quoted by Peter in Acts 2: 16—20. The same darkening and putting out of the lights of the firmament, and the same calamity, distress and end, is expressed in Matt. 25 : 29; Mark 13 : 24, and Luke 21 : 25, and all allude to the last days, the closing scene and winding up of the Jewish theocracy.

We think that Paul's language is sufficient to put an end to all controversy upon the subject. Heb. 1 : 1, 2, "God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in time past to the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." By this use of the phrase last days we see what is meant. No days or time is alluded to beyond that in which Paul and his coadjutors then moved and lived. He prefixes the demonstrative word these to the word days, which so precisely fixes its meaning that no doubts can remain. He also uses the perfect tense of the verb, "hath spoken," which shows that God had already spoken to them by his Son; and that they considered the then passing time the last days, &c.

In noticing the arrangement under the phrase last time, &c., it will be seen that the same time, same end and period, is expressed which is defined by the phrase last days. Peter gives the same definition that Paul has given on the phrase last days. See 1 Peter 1 : 20, "Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." See also 1 John 2 : 18, "Little children, it is the last time." Peter says, 1 Peter 4 : 7, "But the end of all things is at hand." Let it here be remembered that the final end of the Jewish polity did not take place, or the kingdom of God become fully established, until the temple was burnt, and the last remaining light of the Jewish priesthood blown out. This time had not then fully come; but it was at hand; and it was the death struggle, the last expiring scene; and is what Peter calls the end of all things, which was then at hand.

This same end of all things is also expressed by the terms great day, the great day of the Lord, the great day of his wrath, &c.; all pointing to the identical and self-same thing. In Rev. 6 : 17, it is said, "For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" We have already seen that none were able to stand, save those who, through obedience, made their escape, and were shut up in a retired place among the mountains.

We will here notice the text in Acts 17 : 31, " Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained ; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." We did not particularly notice this text in our remarks on the judgment, for the reason that it contains nothing but what relates to time, and was about being accomplished. But we here notice the expression, " He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." We have previously said that the word day was used in a variety of ways in the Scriptures. When any particular time was specified as taking place, either favorably or unfavorably, it was called the day, a day, great day, &c. Jeremiah, in speaking of the return of Israel from captivity, makes the following expression : " Alas ! for that day is great." See Jer. 30 : 7. Joel, as quoted by Peter, calls the destruction of Jerusalem, and the times bordering thereon, " that great and notable day of the Lord." See Acts 2 : 20. John, in allusion to the same time, calls it " the great day of his wrath." Rev. 6 : 17. John, in speaking of the feast of tabernacles, uses the following language : " In the last day, that great day of the feast." See John 7 : 37. That a day was appointed, in which Jesus Christ was to rule or govern the world in righteousness, none can dispute. A day in Scripture often expresses a long series of years. See Heb. 3 : 8, 9, " Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation in the day of temptation in the wilderness, when your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years." Here we learn that forty years were called the day. See also Deut. 32 : 35.

That the period of Messiah's reign is called a day, is evident from Zech. 2 : 11, " And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day (Christ's reign on earth), and shall be my people : and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee." Chapter 13 : 1—8, " In that day there shall be a fountain open to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness." See, also, chapter 14 : 6—9 ; Isa. 49 : 8 ; 2 Cor. 6 : 2 ; John 16 : 26.

Many other passages might be named, but a sufficient number is referred to, to satisfy any rational mind that Christ's reign, or period of judgment in the Gospel, is called a day. The same period is sometimes called the hour of his judgment, &c., as in Rev. 14: 7.

It appears evident that the Jews supposed the Messiah should rule and govern the world in righteousness. The Scriptures explicitly teach this doctrine. But where is there a lesson in all the Bible, from beginning to end, that teaches a day of general judgment after the resurrection from literal death? If such a day is not revealed in the Scriptures, neither in the Old nor New Testament, then, when was it revealed or made known to the children of men? To assume this, and make bold assertions about it, may be easily done, but it is not convincing proof; yet it is all the evidence we have, from any source, of the common opinion.

In the text it reads, "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." The word rendered world in this passage, is not kosmos, nor aion, but oikoumenen. This word is generally rendered world in the New Testament, and, principally, in its meaning, signifies the Roman empire, which included Judea, and most of the then known world. As evidence of this, observe the following passages where the word oikoumenen occurs, and is rendered world. See Luke 2: 1, 4: 5; Acts 25: 5, 19: 27, 11: 28. In these passages it evidently alludes to the Roman empire. And it is quite probable that the same allusion might have been had in this text. But if it had, we are quite willing to admit that the day of Christ's reign extends further. But, that this day had not then already commenced, we are not willing to admit. Christ was not only already judging by his word and spirit, but he was then about to exercise his authority in a special manner. The words, en e mellei krinein (rendered, "in the which he will judge"), simply signify, in the which he is about to judge. And had the text been thus rendered, it would have given its true meaning, and probably would have been better understood. We might extend our remarks to much greater length on this subject, but as we only introduced it in consideration of the word day in which God would judge the world, we shall make but few more remarks upon it. Our object was to show that the day in which Christ judges the world not only extends during the Gospel period, but that it had special reference to a time then at hand.

CHAPTER IX.

ON THE END OF THE WORLD.

SECTION I.

All the passages in the BIBLE wherein the phrase END OF THE WORLD occurs.

Matt. 13 : 36—42. Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house ; and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. He answered, and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man ; the field is the world (kosmos) ; the good seed are the children of the kingdom ; but the tares are the children of the wicked one ; the enemy that sowed them is the devil ; the harvest is the end of the world (aionos) ; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered, and burned in the fire ; so shall it be in the end of this world (aionos). The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity ; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire ; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Verses 47—50. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind : which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world (aionos) : the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire ; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Matt. 24 : 3. And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be ? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world (aionos) ?

Matt. 28 : 18—20. And Jesus came, and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost ; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you : and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world (aionos). Amen.

1 Cor. 10 : 11. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples ; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world (aionon) are come.

Heb. 9 : 26. (For then must he (Christ) often have suffered since the foundation of the world) (kosmou); but now once in the end of the world (aionon) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

SECTION II.

Remarks on the phrase End of the World.

Thousands, yea, undoubtedly, millions, have read the texts in the foregoing section, have heard them read and explained, with full confidence of their teaching the end of the material world or universe. But we have to state that such is not the reality. The phrase, end of the world, does not teach, or even intimate, any such thing. It does not occur in the Old Testament at all. It only occurs in three books of the New Testament, — Matthew, 1st Corinthians, and in Hebrews. It occurs five times in St. Matthew's Gospel, once in 1st Corinthians, and once in Hebrews; in all, it occurs seven times, and only seven, in the whole Bible.

For the true signification of the phrase we have only to consult the connection in which it stands, and the true meaning of the word aionos, rendered world.

By consulting Matt. 13 : 36—42, it will be found that Christ was declaring to his disciples the parable of the tares of the field. He says, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world (kosmos); the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil (diabolos), the harvest is the end of the world (aionos); and the reapers are the angels." It appears to have been the style of the sacred writers, in speaking of any consummation for which men may have been said to be ripe, to call it the harvest. Jer. 8 : 20; Joel 3 : 13. "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down, for the press is full, the fats overflow; for the wickedness is great," &c. See, also, Matt. 9 : 37, 38, and Rev. 14 : 15.

The question now is, What did Christ mean by the harvest, which he calls the end of the world? In the 38th verse, as already seen, the word rendered world, is kosmos: the proper signification of which is the earth; it also signifies the system of the world, or universe. The word kosmos nowhere stands connected with the phrase end of the world. But, in every instance where the phrase end of the world occurs in the Bible, we invariably find the word rendered world to be aionos, — the general signification of which is "time; a space of time; life; lifetime; the ordinary period of man's life; age; age of man," &c. See Donnegan's Lexicon. But we think the word aionos, in these texts, is universally acknowledged, by commentators of note, to signify the age or dispensation. Then, in this text, "the harvest is the end of the world," it must signify the end of the Jewish age, or dispensation. The phrase rendered "end of the world" is sunteleia tou aionos, and literally signifies the conclusion of the age. From the foregoing results we find that the words "end of the world" merely signify the close of the Jewish state. The same expression is made in the 49th verse, and the same end expressed. In verse 50th it is added, "And shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." From these two verses we learn that the angels, after having severed the wicked from among the just, cast them into this furnace of fire. The figure, furnace of fire, is also used in the Scriptures to represent temporal calamity and destruction. The bondage of Israel under Pharaoh was described as a furnace. Deut. 4: 20, "But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt." See, also, 1 Kings 8: 51; Isa. 48: 10; Jer. 2: 4. Thus we see that Christ, in these expressions, signified the distress and destruction of that age, people and nation. And as further proof of the furnace of fire, see Isa. 31: 9, "And he shall pass over to his strong hold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the Lord, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem." By this text we see that Jerusalem was God's furnace, into which the wicked were to be cast at the conclusion of that age. And as further testimony that they were cast into the furnace of fire in Jerusalem, see Ezek. 22: 18—22. "Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace. . . . . Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace to blow the fire upon it, to melt it, so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there and melt you. Yea, I will gather you and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you." We think there cannot remain a lingering doubt that the furnace of fire was the city of Jerusalem, into which God gathered the Jewish nation, and there melted them in the fire of his wrath. All this took place at the end of the world there described.

But it is said, "The angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked, cast them into the furnace of fire," &c. The word here rendered angels is aggeloi, and signifies messengers. Now, who could have been the messengers, or instruments, of destruction to the Jewish nation? The answer is obvious, and can be but one, namely, the Roman armies. Whenever Christ is represented as coming in power to destroy, or to reward, he is represented as being attended by his angels. Matt. 16: 27, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." This is declared, in the next verse, to be during the lifetime of some then living. We further learn who these angels are, in Matt. 24: 30, 31. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Now, as the angels, or messengers, in the 31st verse, are said to "gather together his elect," it is evident they performed a different service from those who destroyed. In Matt. 16: 27, it is said, "When the Son of Man shall come with his angels he will reward every man according to their works." Hence, we may look for angels in the company of Christ, who on the one hand administer evil, and on the other good. In Matt. 25: 31, the angels that come with Christ are called holy. See, also, Mark 8: 38, 9: 1; Luke 9: 26, 27. In all these places the coming of Christ with his angels is confined to that generation. In Matt. 25: 34, it is said, "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Thus we see Christ's coming, in attendance with his angels, to award life to one and death to the other, was during that age. And now for further proof that the Romans were the angels, or messengers, who were to destroy Christ's enemies, the Jews, see 2 Thess. 1 : 7, 8, "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." See, also, Matt. 22 : 7, "But when the king heard thereof he was wroth : and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city." It is clear that these passages allude to the destruction of the Jews and their city, by the Romans. They were the messengers of God's wrath, to administer a just retribution to that untoward generation. A close observer of the Bible is aware that the term angel signifies not only good, but evil messengers; or those who execute both good and evil. The word angel is not only applied to human beings, but even to inanimate objects; as in the case of Paul, when he says "There was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger (aggelos) of satan to buffet me." 2 Cor. 12 : 7. They are also sometimes called holy, — not because they are so of themselves, but because they execute God's holy commands. See remarks on angels, in this work.

The same time and end is expressed in Matt. 24 : 3, where we are informed that the disciples asked the Saviour what should be the sign of his coming, and of the conclusion of the age (sunteleias tou aionos). He speaks of the end of that age, in verses 6, 13, 14, of the same chapter; and, after pointing them to such signs as would infallibly enable them to discern its approach, he adds, verse 34, "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." On the strength of this testimony — plain, clear, and incontrovertible — we say that the "harvest" took place at the conclusion of the Mosaic age; and we further state that there is not an instance in the New Testament in which the Greek phrase, rendered "end of the world," as in the passage on which we are remarking, has any other signification. It should never be forgotten that "the end of the world" (verses 39, 40), at which the harvest was to take place, was not the end of kosmos. the world, — said to be the field, — but the end of aion, the age, which signifies the conclusion of the Jewish state.

The apostle Paul plainly tells us when the end of the world

aionon was. He says that it happened in his day. "Upon whom the ends of the ages (ta tete ton aionon) are come." 1 Cor. 10 : 11. And Christ told his disciples, in Matt. 28 : 20, that he would be with them alway, "even unto the end of the aionos" (age). He was with them, by word and in spirit, until the full or complete end had come. And as Christianity may be said to have begun when the Jewish religion ended, so Christ is said to have appeared at the end of the Jewish age. Paul says, in Heb. 9 : 26, "But now once in the end of the world (sunteleia ton aionon) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Paul says, "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared," &c. He here represents the appearance of Christ, and the end of the world, as having already taken place; though the final scene was not then closed. And as the plural is sometimes used, "the ends of the ages," it is evident that they included the period and end of the apostolic age of miracles with the conclusion of the Jewish age.

We have now seen that all which is said in the Bible of the end of the world transpired about eighteen hundred years since, and in exact accordance with the time predicted that it should take place. And, lo! even yet do we see people gazing after some dire omen in the heavens, as betokening the sudden ruin of nations, the crashing wreck of empires and kingdoms, in connection with the immediate conflagration of our terraqueous globe. Yea, how many, in this eventful year of our Lord 1843, are trembling, Belshazzar-like, at the most common freaks of nature; as though their last expiring breath was about to take its final leap, and their earthly portions, in common with all terrestrial matter, about to be consigned to one eternal night! Yes, are there not thousands, in these (ought to be) happy United States, whose minds (in consequence of one fanatic brain) are now being wrecked in chaos, on the dreadful thought of the immediate sound of the trumpet's blast, and their consignment to one eternal, lasting doom? Ought these things so to be? Christ said to his disciples, "Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." But it was certain that he would come in their day, in that generation. And yet people are so palpably blind to daylight facts, that they either will not, or cannot, hear nor understand. Hundreds of years have passed away since the destined period, and yet some in every age are looking, watching, and expecting the sudden end of the universe.

There are other passages in the Bible, not connected with the phrase end of the world, which, by some, are supposed to teach the end of the material universe. Some of them we have referred to in our remarks on the judgment, and also on the phrase last days. But we will now present a few more passages, the first of which is in Rev. 6: 12—17. "And I beheld, when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair; and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind: and the heaven departed as a scroll, when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places; and the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains: and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" This language is similar to that in the third chapter of 2 Peter, which we have already explained as relating in particular to the end of the aion, or the passing away of the Jewish heavens and earth. Now we, in the first place, make the inquiry, Is this language used in a literal or in a figurative sense? If we consider it literal, then we have the following conclusions: First the earth must have been shaken, at least in some parts of it; for "there was a great earthquake." Second, the earth must have been deprived of light; for "the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." And, in the third place, the earth must have accomplished the greatest miracle ever known; for "the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind." We can conceive the appearance of figs falling to or upon the earth, when furiously driven by the wind; but how to understand the furious beating of the mighty stars of heaven against the (comparatively) small earth, is more than we can conceive of. For it is a fact that the earth still kept her balance and motion. It is not said that the earth was destroyed, or that it departed. The mountains or islands were not destroyed, or removed from the earth; they were only moved out of their places: while the kings of the earth, with the many others, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains, calling upon the same to hide them from the face of him that sat upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. It is said the heavens departed, but not the earth; she still stood, notwithstanding her burden of stars, and made a foothold for the four angels, which John soon after saw standing upon her four corners, holding the four winds, that they should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor any green tree. Another difficulty is to be considered. "The heaven departed as a scroll, when it is rolled together." And where was it? The previous verse tells us that the stars (which constitute the literal heavens) had fallen to the earth. Of course the conclusion must be this: all the mighty hosts of the starry heavens rolled together in one confused mass (having lost the power of gravitation), and, finally, lit upon the earth as a resting-place! This conclusion must, of itself, be perfectly ridiculous. Even one of the stars, on a common average, is much larger than the earth, which fact would literally render it impossible!

But, in viewing these passages, and all others of the like kind, in a figurative sense, we have no great difficulty in understanding them. We have before referred to the language of Joel, as quoted by Peter, and applied to the times in which he lived. See Acts 2: 16, 19, 20, "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel. . . . I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath, blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come." Peter assures us that this language was fulfilled in his days; yet the earth, the sun and the moon, still remain. Isaiah uses the same language in describing the judgment about to fall upon Idumea. Isa. 34: 4, 5, "And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their hosts shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as the falling fig from the fig-tree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment." The events here described have long since been numbered with the past; yet the heavens and the earth remain. In the text it is said, they called for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, to hide them, &c. But Jesus uses the same language in allusion to the same horrors which should attend the destruction of Jerusalem.

Luke 23: 30, "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, Cover us." In Luke 21: 22, he says, "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." The great day of wrath, in the text, is answered by the days of vengeance, which fell upon the Jewish nation. It is not at all strange that either Christ or John should use such highly figurative language in the above descriptions; for, as we have seen, it was the style of the Eastern nations, in describing the revolutions in civil or ecclesiastical governments, to use bold and metaphorical expressions. Peter has made use of similar language in his second epistle, chap. 3: 7—13, which we have noticed in another place. David also tells us, "The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, the earth melted." Whatever else David might have meant by the melting of the earth, he could not have alluded to its literal destruction, for he represents it as already past. In Ps. 97: 5, he says, "The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord." In Joel 1: 19, 20, it is said, "O Lord, to thee will I cry: for the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field. The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness." See, also, Deut. 32: 22—25, "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn to the lowest hell (sheol), and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." That the above language is figurative, and equally as strong as any in the New Testament, will not be disputed.

There is also another class of texts, which may be supposed to imply the literal destruction of heaven and earth; some of which we will briefly notice. In Isa. 51: 6, it is said, "Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: but my salvation shall be forever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished." Ps. 102: 25—27, "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shall thou change them, and they shall be changed. But thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end."

It is agreed, by good critics, that according to the Hebrew idiom, when the respective qualities of two objects are compared, the writer uses a direct affirmation in regard to the one, and an absolute negation in regard to the other. According to this idiom, the Prophet and the Psalmist both expressed in strong terms the abiding nature of God's goodness and salvation, by declaring that they should remain, though the heavens and the earth should pass away. Paul, in Heb. 1: 10, 12, quotes the language of David, and preserves the same style of expression. And let it here be remembered that the language of the New Testament is strongly tinctured with the idiom and style of the Old Testament, or Hebrew writings. The same rule of interpretation in this respect, applies both to the Old and to the New Testament. Matt. 24: 35, says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Here we see the same style, which establishes the certainty of his word, and only signifies that heaven and earth would sooner pass away than his word prove false. In Matt. 5: 18, it is said, "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in nowise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Here it is implied that heaven and earth cannot pass away. The phrase, "till heaven and earth pass away," is evidently a proverbial expression for anything that appears impossible; for Luke says, chap. 16: 17, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass than one tittle of the law to fail." That heaven and earth should pass away, or perish, seems impossible; equally impossible is it that the smallest part of the law should fail of being fulfilled. Thus, we have seen from the language of scripture, there is no evidence of the destruction of the material world or universe.

CHAPTER X.

ON THE WORD FIRE, AND PHRASES EVERLASTING, ETERNAL, AND UNQUENCHABLE FIRE.

SECTION I.

Those passages where the word FIRE, and the phrases EVERLASTING, ETERNAL, and UNQUENCHABLE FIRE, occur.

Deut. 32 : 22—25. For a fire is kindled in mine anger ; and shall burn unto the lowest hell (sheol), and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. I will heap mischiefs upon them ; I will spend mine arrows upon them. They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction : I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust. The sword without and terror within shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also, with the man of gray hairs.

Numb. 21 : 28, 29. For there is a fire gone out of Heshbon, a flame from the city of Sihon : it hath consumed Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon. Woe to thee, Moab ! thou art undone, O people of Chemosh : he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon, king of the Amorites.

Jer. 48 : 45. They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force : but a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.

Ps. 66 : 10—12. For thou, O God, hast proved us : thou hast tried us as silver is tried. Thou broughtest us into the net ; thou laidest affliction upon our loins. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads ; we went through fire and through water : but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

Ps. 83 : 13—15. O my God, make them like a wheel ; as the stubble before the wind. As the fire burneth the wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire ; so persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

Ps. 97 : 3—5. A fire goeth before him (God), and burneth up his enemies round about His lightnings enlightened the world : the earth saw, and trembled. The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the Lord of the whole earth.

Isa. 9 : 19, 20. Through the wrath of the Lord of hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the fuel of the fire ; no man shall spare his brother. And he shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry ; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied : they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm.

Isa. 47 : 14. Behold, they shall be as stubble ; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves from the power of the flame : there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

Isa. 66 : 15, 16. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh : and the slain of the Lord shall be many.

Lam. 2 : 3, 4. He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel : he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about. He hath bent his bow like an enemy : he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion : he poured out his fury like fire.

Ezek. 21 : 31, 32. And I will pour out mine indignation upon thee ; I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of brutish men, and skilful to destroy. Thou shalt be for fuel to the fire ; thy blood shall be in the midst of the land ; thou shalt be no more remembered : for I the Lord have spoken it.

Ezek. 22 : 18—22. Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross : all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace ; they are even the dross of silver. Therefore, thus saith the Lord God ; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. And as they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it to melt it, so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you. Yea, I will gather you and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof ; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

Mal. 3 : 2, 3. But who may abide the day of his coming ? and who shall stand when he appeareth ? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver : and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

Matt. 3 : 10. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off : it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to go into hell (Gehenna), into the fire that never shall be quenched ; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. . . . . And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out : it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than, having two eyes, to be cast into hell-fire (Gehenna puros); where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

Acts 2 : 3, 4. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

1 Cor. 3 : 13—15. Every man's work shall be made manifest : for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire : and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. 2 Thess. 1 : 7—9. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ : who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool : his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him : thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him : the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

Dan. 10 : 6. His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in color to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.

Everlasting Fire. — Matt. 18 : 8. Wherefore, if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee : it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands, or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire (aionion pur, or fire of the age).

Luke 3 : 17. Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner ; but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire.

SECTION II.

Brief Remarks on the scripture usage of the word Fire, and the phrases Everlasting, Eternal and Unquenchable Fire.

It will readily be learned from a careful observance of those scriptures arranged in Section 1 of this Chapter, that the term fire is a very common and emblematical expression, denoting severe trials, calamities, and even common afflictions of the people, called the judgments of God. It will also be seen that the term fire, in many instances, stands immediately connected with the words rendered hell, such as Sheol, Gehenna, &c., which see in this work.

The above facts are so easily understood, both from the Old and New Testament scriptures, that but very little need be said. The first place in which it is mentioned in the New Testament is Matt. 3 : 10, "And now also the axe is laid unto the roots of the trees : therefore every tree that bringeth forth not good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire." There are other similar passages, which teach the same things, and are understood in the same manner. Under the figure of cutting down trees, and casting them into the fire, in this text, is represented the severe judgment about to fall on the Jewish nation, which was before denominated the wrath to come. This figure was often used by the prophets, and, consequently, must have been well understood by the Jews in our Saviour's day. See Isa. 10 : 33, 34 ; Jer. 46 : 22, 23 ; Ezek. 31 : 23.

We need not offer arguments that this is the true application of this and the like passages, inasmuch as there is such a universal agreement on the subject among standard commentators. Hammond says, "But now are God's judgments come home to this people, and ready to seize upon the whole nation, and shall actually fall upon every unreformed sinner among you." Par. in loc. Pearce says, "Vengeance is about to be taken upon the Jewish nation." Assembly's Annotations, Poole's Annotations, Lightfoot, and others, make the same application. Clarke says, "The Jewish nation is the tree, and the Romans the axe," &c. Kenrick says, "The national calamities with which you are threatened, are no light evils, but such as, if you do not repent, shall be like cutting up the tree by the roots ; for as barren trees, which bring forth no fruit, are hewn down and cast into the fire, so shall it be with you, if you perform not good works ; your kingdom shall be overthrown, and the inhabitants of the land utterly extirpated." See Paige's Selections.

A like application is made of similar passages, by the same authors. There is not, in truth, an instance in the Bible where fire is used to signify punishment in eternity. In sermons and exhortations a different interpretation is often given ; but few, however, are willing to risk their reputation for biblical knowledge, by publicly disputing what is so abundantly asserted by the most learned authors.

In the second place it will be seen, in the observance of those passages, that by fire is prefigured the truth of God; which is represented as burning, cleansing, purifying and heating. See Mal. 4 : 1, and 3 : 2, 3. By these quotations is learned the burning affliction of the Jewish people, in the day of their distress. Dr. A. Clarke says, "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven, — signifying the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. And all the proud, — this is in reference to verse 15, of the preceding chapter. The day that cometh shall burn them up, — either by famine, by sword, or by captivity, all these rebels shall be destroyed. It shall leave them neither root nor branch; — a proverbial expression for total destruction; neither man nor child shall escape." Com. on Mal. 4 : 1. Thus Clarke applies the passage wholly to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. It is also seen, from the same (Mal. 3 : 3), that Christ is represented at that time as sitting "as a refiner and purifier of silver : purifying the sons of Levi, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." The prophet represents the Lord himself as a wall of fire. Zech. 2 : 5, "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and a glory in the midst of her" (Jerusalem). In Luke 12 : 49, it is said, "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?" Heb. 12 : 29, Paul says, "For our God is a consuming fire." From the above remarks are made plain the nature and qualities of this fire. The properties and qualities of God are indestructible. There are also moral and intellectual properties in man, as parts of God's perfection, or image, which cannot be destroyed. Thus, notwithstanding "God is a consuming fire," yet, that fire is such that it only consumes what stands opposed to its own perfections : it cannot destroy its own qualities or properties. Hence the utility of the apostle's language in 1 Cor. 3 : 13—15, "Every man's work shall be made manifest : for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire : and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide, which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss : but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." So we learn that this fire not only consumes wickedness, wicked works, and the imperfections of man, but at the same time purifies and saves the suffering sinner.

In 2 Thess. 1 : 7—9, the apostle speaks of the Lord Jesus "as being revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting (aionion) destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This revelation by fire, and the destruction of the age, upon those that obeyed not God or the gospel, was the same as expressed in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matt., namely, the destruction of Jerusalem and that people as a nation. The Jews were those who troubled the Thessalonian brethren, and when Christ was revealed in fire (his chastening power), those Jews were punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, — that is, from Jerusalem, — and from the glory of his power. There was no glory resulting to those wicked Jews; they had been disobedient, and must receive the fruit of their doings. The violation of every law, whether physical, moral or national, must have its results. The Jews had undoubtedly violated all of those laws; of course they must suffer accordingly. The time had come; they were ripe for its result. It is called the destruction of the age (aionion destruction), because that age of people were ripe for the result, and the angels, or messengers (the Romans), were ready to execute it. It took place during that generation. See Matt. 16 : 27, 28. Mark 8 : 38; 9 : 1; Luke 9 : 26, 27; Matt. 23 : 36; 24 : 34. Christ is represented as taking vengeance on them, not only because he had warned them of its approach, and cautioned them to be wise and shun its calamities, but because they had utterly refused to give heed to his warnings and instructions, maltreating him as an impostor and malefactor. Christ, in this ordeal, sat as a refiner. Nothing was consumed or destroyed save the wicked and wickedness. The destruction of the wicked was only literal; he did not destroy them further than their literal existence was concerned. Nothing is said of following them into eternity. See Luke 13 : 1—5, "There were present at that season some that told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. And Jesus, answering, said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. Or those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you, Nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Here Christ informed the Jews that, unless they reformed, and gave heed to his advice, they should all likewise perish, — that is, they should perish in like manner as did the Galileans: they lost their earthly existence, and so did the Jews at Jerusalem. It was the natural result of their previous course, while, at the same time, all who heeded Christ's instruction were saved. This fiery catastrophe did not consume the righteous; they made their escape, and were safe.

There are several passages, such as 2 Peter 3: 7, Rev. 20: 9, and some others, which relate to the same time, and have the same interpretation. Whenever the term fire is connected with Sheol, or Gehenna, it can have no more than a temporal signification; for the reason that those places themselves are only temporal, as will be seen in this work.

We find at least two instances where the adjective aionion, rendered everlasting, is prefixed to the word fire; but it is well known that adjectives do not of themselves establish qualities in nouns; they are only used to express those properties or qualities that are inherent in the subject itself. Hence punishment (which was the object of this fire), being a means and not an end, cannot be affected by aionion, whatever meaning may be attached to it. The truth is, aionion, or everlasting, has no other than a limited signification. See on that word, in this work. In Matt. 18: 8, and 25: 41, the phrase everlasting fire occurs, and appears to allude (especially the first, from its parallel in Mark 9: 43—48) to the fire of Gehenna, which will be considered under that head. It also appears that the last stands connected with that event. The word everlasting, applied to punishment, and the word eternal, applied to life, in this verse, are both from the same word, and both have the same meaning: the one shall go away into punishment aionion, the other into life aionion. So we see that both words have the same meaning, and that neither has an unlimited signification.

In Jude 7, the same word occurs, and is prefixed to fire, — rendered eternal fire. Jude is here speaking of Sodom and Gomorrah, with other cities that had given themselves over to wickedness, as being set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire Although the word aionion, here rendered eternal, has the same signification as above defined, yet it will be seen that the phrase, eternal fire, is here used as the instrument of punishment. Let that fire last as long as it may, it is not said that they were to suffer eternally, or even as long as the fire might continue to burn. The word eternal is here prefixed to fire, not to the cities or their inhabitants. It is stated that the fire which consumed the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah actually continued to burn for more than two thousand years; but who could be so insane as to suppose that the inhabitants of those cities suffered during that period? It is immaterial how long that fire continued to burn on the plains of Sodom and Gomorrah; it is certain that the inhabitants could suffer no longer than life remained. Hence, no shade of an argument can be adduced from this text to favor the unmerciful doctrine of endless misery.

In Matt. 3: 12, and Luke 3: 17, we have instances where this fire is called unquenchable. It will, however, readily be understood that this unquenchable fire stands immediately connected with the axe and the trees that were to be hewn down and cast into the fire; and also with the baptism which was to be performed with the Holy Ghost and with fire. From the connection of these expressions, it certainly is reasonable to suppose that the same subject is in view, and the same signification given, — with the exception that he here extends his figure in showing favor to the obedient, as well as stern judgment to the disobedient. By gathering his wheat into the garner is signified the deliverance and safety of those who obeyed him, and who were actually safe from all harm in the city of Pella, among the mountains; while the unbelieving Jews were left to the pitiless fury of the Roman armies, and the fiery pangs of starvation and death. The severe distress of the Jews was represented by the phrase unquenchable fire, not because the fire would never cease to burn, but because it could not be extinguished, and would continue until the material on which it fed should be destroyed, or until the cause by which it was produced should be entirely removed.

Pearce, on this text, says, "In this whole verse the destruction of the Jewish state is expressed in the terms of husbandmen; and by the wheat's being gathered into the garner, seems meant that the believers in Jesus should not be involved in the calamity." Hammond says, "The burning of this chaff signifies the condition of the Jews in this life." Cappe refers it to the calamities and destruction of Jerusalem. Kenrick and Clarke give the same exposition. See their comments in full, Paige's Selections.

We know of no arguments which can possibly be made to bear against the foregoing conclusions. The fire of God's love and truth will burn, and continue to burn, to all eternity, and that for the good of his creatures. That called the fire of affliction, as connected with man, will burn until every imperfection is removed, and no longer.

CHAPTER XI.

ON THE WORM THAT DIETH NOT

SECTION I.

Those passages where the expression THEIR WORM DIETH NOT may be found

Isa. 66 : 23, 24. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me : for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched : and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

Mark 9 : 43—48. And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off : it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to go into hell (Gehenna), into the fire that never shall be quenched ; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off ; it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than, having two feet, to be cast into hell (Gehenna), into the fire that never shall be quenched ; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out : it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than, having two eyes, to be cast into hell-fire (Gehenna puros) ; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

SECTION II.

Brief Remarks on the "Worm that dieth not."

The expression, "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," is relied on with much confidence, by the believer in endless misery, as strong proof of that doctrine. But for what reason we are unable to learn. Sure are we that the scripture usage of the expression gives no such evidence. It is well known that the worm here expressed was represented as in Gehenna; consequently, all depends upon the nature, durability and continuance, of that place. Now Gehenna, here rendered hell, is well known to be a word of Hebrew origin, and strictly signifies the literal valley of Hinnom; from HINNOM, the owner of the valley, which was on the south-east of the city of Jerusalem, and watered by the brook Kedron. See Aspin's History and Maps. In this valley had been planted the notable idol (worshipped by the Jews), called Moloch. After a lapse of time this place was desecrated, and became the receptacle of the filth and offal of the city; and, as this offal constantly produced worms, hence came the expression "where their worm dieth not;" and as it became necessary to keep a perpetual fire for the consumption of said offal, came the expression "and the fire is not quenched." Such facts are too well authenticated to be disputed by any intelligent or well-informed mind. Both the worms and the fire existed so long as there was a cause to produce them; but it is well known that, for ages past, both have ceased to exist. This place was sometimes called Tophet, the valley of slaughter, &c. Jer. 7 : 31, and 19 : 6. With these facts in mind, how are we to interpret our Saviour's expression, or how could the Jews have understood him? They knew all about Gehenna, and its puros, or pur, — fire. Christ knew all about this Gehenna, which he presented to the people; and if he prefigured pain and misery thereby, what time and place did he allude to? Had he, on any other occasion, or at any time, taught the Jews that there was a Gehenna of fire in eternity? or that there was any place there prefigured by Gehenna? No, reader, never adopt such conclusions until you are enabled, by good authority, to point us to such time and to such place.

Are you not aware that the only part of man which can exist in eternity is spiritual, immortal, closely connected with Christ, the object which he loved, and for which he died? And can you suppose that Christ meant to signify, by his expression, a direct comparison between the immortal part of man in eternity and the loathsome worms of the valley of Hinnom? If so, reflect for a moment, and examine both sides of your figure. If your conclusions be right, then, all who escape hell and go to heaven (in eternity), must certainly go there halt, maimed and decrepit, — perhaps some with one eye, or one limb, and peradventure some without either. These are unavoidable conclusions; for he says, if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; or, if thy foot offend thee. cut it off; or, if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out; for it is better for thee to enter halt, maimed, &c., into life, than, having all these members, to be cast into Gehenna fire. Now, whosoever makes choice of the above figure of Gehenna, must also abide by their heaven of decrepitude; and there is no remedy; for if Gehenna means an eternal hell, then life means eternal heaven, vice versa.

We will now leave the above figure, and inquire after the probable meaning of the passage. When Christ made this expression to the Jews, he undoubtedly had his mind on the passage of the prophet. Isa. 66: 23, 24, "And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they (all flesh) shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." That the prophet used these words to express temporal judgments, will not be disputed. He speaks of a period in which there were new moons and Sabbath days; and of a place in which there were fleshly, or corporeal worshippers; and the worms and fire, they went forth to look upon, could not have been in eternity, for he says, "they shall look upon the carcasses of the men," and adds, "they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Now there can be no such thing as carcasses in the eternal world; neither could those there "be an abhorring unto all flesh;" for there is neither new moons, Sabbath days, carcasses, flesh, nor worms, in the eternal and immortal worlds. Hence, Christ could not have used this language to convey any other than the same idea conveyed by the prophet, and understood by the people. When he said to them, it is better to enter halt into life, &c., he could have meant nothing more or less, than they had better forego all their pleasures, gains, unbelief, and whatever served as obstacles, and heed his advice, make their escape, and be saved from the distress and ruin suddenly coming upon that people and nation. Thus, all that can possibly be understood by the undying worm, and the Gehenna of fire, is confined to earth, and earthly existence. For further illustrations, see on the word Gehenna in this work.

CHAPTER XII.

ON THE FURNACE OF FIRE.

SECTION I.

Those passages where the words FURNACE, FURNACE OF FIRE, etc., occur

Deut. 4 : 20. But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day.

1 Kings 8 : 51. For they be thy people, and thine inheritance which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of the furnace of iron.

Jer. 11 : 4. Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you : so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God.

Isa. 31 : 9. And he shall pass over to his strong hold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the Lord, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem.

Isa. 48 : 10. Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver ; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

Ezek. 22 : 18—22. Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross : all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace ; they are even the dross of silver. Therefore thus saith the Lord God ; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it, so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you. Yea, I will gather you and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof ; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

Matt. 13 : 41, 42. The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Verse 50. And shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

SECTION II.

Remarks on the Furnace of Fire.

It is commonly thought that by the phrase furnace of fire is signified a place somewhere in the eternal world, in which a large share of the human family will be tortured without end.

The word furnace is, in several instances, used in the Jewish scriptures, to signify literal afflictions and trials of the people. Furnace of affliction is also used for the same purpose. But wherever those few instances occur, they stand immediately connected with the temporal concerns of men; they have no allusion, in any case, beyond the affairs of time. And this is made so plain by a careful perusal of the passages themselves, that none can well mistake their meaning. Isaiah makes use of the expression once, in chapter 48: 10, "Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." This language was addressed to the Jews in Babylon. He did not say that he had chosen them as the inmates of a furnace of affliction in eternity; but says, "I have refined thee," "I have chosen thee," &c. It was already done; they were then in the furnace, by which was signified their bondage under the Chaldeans. Any place of affliction was represented by the prophets under the figures of "fire," "furnace," "furnace of fire," "furnace of affliction," &c. Egypt was called an iron furnace to the Jews, while they were there in affliction. But he had brought them forth "out of the furnace;" see Deut. 4: 20, also 1 Kings 8: 51. Let it also be remembered that it was his people who were in the furnace, and not a race abandoned to a furnace of the devil in eternity. "For they be thy people, and thine inheritance which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of the furnace of iron." The imperfect tense of the verb here shows that they had been in, and also brought out of, the furnace. But Matt. 13: 41, nforms us, that "the Son of Man shall send forth his angels (messengers), and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Here, some future time is expressed, in which they were to be cast into a furnace of fire. The question is, first, what time is alluded to; and, second, what or where was this furnace? 1. To learn the time when they were to be cast into this furnace, we must observe, that this expression was made by Christ to his disciples, in explanation of the parable of the tares of the field. See verses 36—43. He firstly informs them that the Son of Man soweth the good seed, which are the children of the kingdom Secondly, "that the field is the world (kosmos); but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world (aionos, age); and the reapers are the angels" (angeloi, messengers). The world which was to have an end here is not kosmos, the field, but aionos, which shows that it was the end of the Jewish age, or dispensation, when the tares were to be separated and cast into the furnace of fire. Pearce says, verse 40, "End of this world: rather end of this age, viz., that of the Jewish dispensation." Verse 41, "Shall send forth his angels: this is spoken, not of what shall happen at the end of the world, but what was to happen at the end of the Jewish state." Hammond and Cappe give in substance the same comment on the passages.

The above shows that the time was the end or destruction of the Jewish age; and that the place or furnace was in Jerusalem. To make this still plainer, see Isa. 31: 9, "Whose fire is in Zion and his furnace in Jerusalem." This is plain, positive, and decisive language. "His furnace is in Jerusalem." It is nowhere said, that God has a furnace in eternity, or that he will ever prepare one there; but this furnace, which was future to the time of the expression, actually received those who were to be melted therein, about forty-one years after the ascension of our Saviour. See Ezek. 22: 18—22. There it is declared that the house of Israel, the Jews, had become dross, and that the Lord would gather them into the midst of Jerusalem, as they gather tin, brass, silver, &c., into the midst of the furnace to melt it. So would he, the Lord, gather into the furnace, Jerusalem, the Jews; leave them there, melt them, &c. What can be more plain and definite? This was all literally fulfilled in Jerusalem 1800 years since, in strict accordance with the prediction of our Saviour, in Matt. 13: 41, 43. What more is necessary to make the subject perfectly plain to every one?

CHAPTER XIII.

ON THE LAKE OF FIRE, LAKE OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE, AND SECOND DEATH.

SECTION I.

Those passages wherein the phrases LAKE OF FIRE, LAKE OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE, and SECOND DEATH, occur.

Verse 14. And death and hell (hades) were cast into the lake of fire This is the second death.

Rev. 21 : 8. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death

SECTION II.

Brief Remarks on the foregoing Section.

The word fire, and the phrases everlasting and eternal fire, and the furnace of fire, are all explained in their proper places. In this subject we have the lake of fire and brimstone. Brimstone is well known to be a very ignitible substance, and, when in contact with fire, to produce a most destructive and deadly effusion. The figure was evidently used to signify the deleterious and pungent consequence of aggravated crime. The expression, lake of fire and brimstone, occurs nowhere in the Bible excepting in the book of Revelation. Fire and brimstone are used as figures in different parts of the Bible, and always represent afflictions and trials in this life. In Job 18: 15, it is said (in speaking of the wicked), "Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation." In Ps. 11: 6, it is said, "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup." Now, no one will suppose that David had an allusion to eternity when he said, "the Lord should rain snares, fire, brimstone, and an horrible tempest upon the wicked!" His expression was figurative, and to be accomplished in this world. In Isa. 34: 9, 10, in speaking of the land of Idumea, it is said, "And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it forever and ever." Ezekiel, in speaking of the wicked and disobedient, declares that the Lord will send upon them an overflowing rain, and great hail-stones, fire and brimstone. In Rev. 19: 20, it is said of the beast and false prophet, that "these both were cast alive into the lake of fire, burning with brimstone." No one can suppose that people can be cast alive into a lake of fire and brimstone, in the spirit-world. And, in 20: 10, it is said, "The devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever." Here we have the same lake, and those who are therein shall be tormented day and night, forever and ever. If there be day and night in eternity, then must there also be a sun to rise and set, to divide the time and tell the rolling year, even in eternity! Let the opinions of men be what they may, the "lake of fire and brimstone" is confined to this terraqueous globe; and by no genius of man can it be established as a machine of torture in the eternal world.

But it is said that "the fearful, unbelieving, &c., with all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." Very true! It is also said that "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Rev. 20: 14. Also, in 6: 8, it is said that there was a "pale horse; and his name that sat upon him was death, and hell followed with him." There was also a "beast with seven heads and ten horns," with many other things which might be named, all of which must have a like interpretation. Now, if "death and hell," the "beast and his rider," the "seven heads and ten horns," are used as figures, then, certainly, the lake of fire burning with brimstone, into which the above were cast, must also be a figure, representing the fall or end of the tragedy in which they were then acting. This lake of fire and brimstone is said to be the second death. See Rev. 20: 14, and 21: 8. Now, as we have abundantly shown that fire, the furnace of fire, and the lake of fire and brimstone, are all confined to this world, and their sufferings endured in this life, so also must the second death be here, in this state of existence, and not in eternity. The phrase second death occurs in only four passages in the Bible. Those passages are in Rev. 2: 11, 20: 6, 14, and 21: 8. We have stated, in our remarks on the judgment, that the second death is the tragical end and ruin of the Jewish people and nation. In Rev. 2: 11, it is said unto the churches, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Those who heard and obeyed the instruction given by our Saviour were not hurt, or involved in the ruin which overtook the heedless and unbelieving. It is the opinion of able writers that this scene was called the second death, in allusion to the destruction of the second temple, which was demolished at that time. We have no doubt but that the opinion is correct. The destruction of the first and second temples undoubtedly led John, in view of the destruction of the last, to term it the second death. This was not only the second, but the last, with them as a nation. It is not in the power of man to show, from good authority, that any death whatever is to take place, or be suffered in eternity.

SECTION II.

Remarks on the phrases STAND BEFORE GOD, APPEAR BEFORE GOD, and PRESENCE OF THE LORD.

The passages which we have collected together, in Section 1 of this Chapter, from the Bible, in which these phrases occur, require but very little comment. They speak for themselves. If the reader will carefully consult them, he will see that the following facts are perfectly obvious.

1. Mankind are frequently spoken of as standing before God, appearing before God, and as being in the presence of God, when no reference is had to a future world; and, when all of this took place in the present world.

2. It was a common mode of speech among the Hebrews, when anything remarkable took place, or when any particular interposition of divine Providence was manifest, to represent those who saw it, as standing before God, and as being in God's presence.

3. It was supposed by the Jews that God's presence was in a particular manner in the temple of Jerusalem, in the city of Jerusalem, and in the land of Judea.

4. The Jews are spoken of as being in God's presence, when nothing more is meant than that they were in the enjoyment of their national rights and privileges in the land of Judea. And they are spoken of as being cast out from God's presence, when nothing more is meant than that they were banished from the land of Judea, from the temple and holy city, and carried captives to Babylon.

5. When, therefore, John saw in a vision, "the dead, small and great, stand before God," Rev. 20 : 12, it by no means follows that he saw them literally stand before God; nor that this standing before God took place in another world.

6. When it is said of the Jews that they should "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power," it does not follow that they were to be punished in another world, nor be banished from God's presence there. The following extract from Balfour's Second Inquiry will present this subject in its true light.

"By the presence of God, or presence of the Lord, in scripture, is sometimes meant his being everywhere present. Thus, David says, Ps. 139 : 7, 8, 'Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? Or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell (sheol), behold, thou art there,' &c. Admitting, for argument's sake, that hell is a place of endless punishment, how could the wicked even there be out of God's presence? Yet, in 2 Thess. 1 : 9, the Jews are said to be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. Again; I find the phrase presence of the Lord, refers to heaven, or the dwelling-place of the Most High. Christ is said to have gone 'into heaven, now to appear in the presence of God for us.' Heb. 9: 24. And it is said, Luke 1: 19, 'I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God.' But how could the wicked be punished with everlasting destruction from God's presence in this sense? For surely no one will say that they were ever in heaven, and like Gabriel stood in the presence of God. But, again, the phrase face of God, or presence of the Lord, refers to some places where people went to worship him, and where he met with and manifested himself to them. Thus Jacob, at Penuel, Gen. 32: 30, says, 'I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.' See Job 1: 6—12, and 2: 1—7, for examples of the same phrase, presence of the Lord. Unless there was some particular place where God was manifested in the days of Cain, how could it be said, 'and Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod (or vagabond, as in the margin), in the east of Eden?' Gen. 4: 16; and verse 14, it is added by Cain, 'Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid.'

"It is very evident that the presence of the Lord was in a peculiar manner among the children of Israel. See Ex. 33: 14—17; compare Isa. 63: 9, and Ps. 51: 11. The tabernacle in the wilderness and the temple at Jerusalem were considered by the Jews as the peculiar residence of Jehovah. There he abode, and there they performed all their religious services to him. Jehovah was the God of the Jews; their land his land, and the temple there was considered the place of his immediate presence. In the temple at Jerusalem, God is said to dwell between the cherubims. Ps. 80. The show bread placed there is called 'the loaves of the presence or faces.' And, viewed in this light, the following texts have great beauty and force. 'Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.' 'Serve the Lord with gladness, come before his presence with singing. Glory and honor are in his presence; strength and gladness are in his place.' Ps. 95: 2, and 100: 2· 1 Chron. 16: 27. But that the land of Judea, and particularly the temple, was considered by the Jews as the place of God's peculiar presence, is manifest from Jonah 1: 3, 'But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish, from the presence of the Lord.' Where he believed the Lord's presence to be, we learn from chap. 2: 4, 'I am cast out of thy sight; but I will look again toward thy holy temple.' In short, whether the Jews were in their own land, or in captivity, when they prayed or performed acts of worship to their God, their thoughts and their faces were directed towards their temple at Jerusalem. See, in proof of this, Dan. 6: 10; 1 Kings 8; Ps. 5: 7.

"But there are still some passages which deserve our particular notice, because they clearly decide what is the meaning of the phrase, presence of the Lord. The first is, 2 Kings 13: 23, 'And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast them from his presence as yet.' This was spoken of the Jews; and just notice, that God speaks of destroying them, and casting them from his presence. What he here says, that as yet, he would not do to this people, in the following passage we find that he did do. 2 Kings 24: 20, 'For through the anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.' The same is repeated, Jer. 52: 3. God's presence was enjoyed by the Jews in Judea, and in their temple service. To be cast out of God's presence, is to be banished from Judea into captivity, and from all the privileges which the Jews enjoyed in their land, and temple worship. This was the same as destroying them. They were thus destroyed or cast out of God's presence for seventy years in their captivity at Babylon. But they were brought back from this captivity, and again enjoyed God's presence in their own land. At the time Paul wrote the words in Thessalonians, the time was drawing near when they were to be again cast out of God's presence, and dispersed among all nations. Paul adopts the very language of the above passages, used in speaking of their former captivity, to describe the judgments of God which awaited them in their being cast out of their land, their city and temple destroyed, and they destroyed with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. The Jews now are just as certainly destroyed from the presence of the Lord, as they were during the seventy years' captivity in Babylon. How, then, can any man affirm that Paul meant, by this phrase, either annihilation or endless misery? If the Scriptures are allowed to interpret themselves, Paul only describes the temporal destruction and banishment of the Jews, and in the very language by which the prophets had described their former punishments. It is added by the apostle, 'and from the glory of his power;' or, as some render it, 'his glorious power.' Should this be understood of Jehovah, the God of Israel, it is certain his glorious power was displayed among the Jews. Should it be understood of Christ, it agrees with what is said of him; for at the destruction of Jerusalem he is said to have come in the glory of his Father; and he was then to be seen coming with power and great glory. Matt. 16: 27, and 24: 30"

SECTION IV.

Remarks on the phrases KINGDOM OF GOD, KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, etc.

By examining all the passages in Sections I., II. and III., of this Chapter, it will be seen,

1. That the phrases kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven are perfectly synonymous in their meaning. This is proved by the fact that they are used interchangeably by the inspired writers. That is, what is signified by one by the phrase kingdom of God, is signified by the other by the phrase kingdom of heaven. Compare Matt. 4 : 17 with Mark 1 : 14, 15, and Matt. 5 : 3 with Luke 6 : 20, and Matt. 8 : 11 with Luke 13 : 28, 29, and Matt. 18 : 3 with Mark 10 : 15.

2. The phrases, a kingdom, the kingdom, everlasting kingdom, &c., are used to signify the same as the phrases, kingdom of God, and kingdom of heaven. This is so obvious that it requires no proof.

That the phrases are used to signify the reign of the Messiah, or Gospel dispensation, is evident from the following facts :

1. This kingdom is called Christ's kingdom. Luke 22 : 29, and John 18 : 36. In this last text Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world." It might not be of this world, and yet be in this world. It is a spiritual kingdom, and partakes not of the nature of any earthly kingdom ever established among men. Hence, it is not of this world, although it is in this world.

2. It is called the kingdom of God, and of heaven, because, in a primary sense, it is God's rule and reign in the earth, by the power and influence of his truth. The word kingdom signifies reign, rule, authority and power. As God reigns, rules and governs men, under the Gospel dispensation, through the instrumentality of Jesus Christ, hence, this kingdom is called, in a secondary sense, the kingdom of Christ.

3. This kingdom is spoken of as having been, at the time of the commencement of the ministry of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ, near at hand. Matt. 3 : 1, 2 ; 4 : 17, and Mark 1 : 14. 15. It was not, therefore, a great way off, nor in the future and invisible world ; but it was about to be established in the earth, in accordance with the prediction of the prophet Daniel. See Daniel 2 : 44.

4. It is spoken of as having, in the days of Christ and his apostles, come nigh unto the people. Luke 10 : 9, 11.

5. Persons are spoken of as being not far from the kingdom of God. Mark 12 : 34.

6. It is spoken of as having actually come to the people in the days of Jesus Christ. Matt. 12 : 28 ; Luke 17 : 21, and 11 : 20.

7. Persons are spoken of as pressing into, entering into, and as actually being in this kingdom. Matt. 5 : 3, 10, and 23 : 13 ; Luke 6 : 20, and 16 : 16 ; Col. 1 : 13 ; Heb. 12 : 28, and Rev. 1 : 9. All of these persons were alive and on the earth. Hence, this kingdom must have been in this world.

8. Food and raiment are promised to individuals after they have entered into this kingdom. Matt. 6 : 33 ; Luke 12 : 31. And persons are spoken of as eating bread in the kingdom of God. Luke 14 : 15. But, certainly, food and clothing will not be needed in the resurrection world, nor will bread be partaken of there.

9. People are spoken of as coming from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south, and sitting down in the kingdom of God. Luke 13 : 29 ; Matt. 8 : 11. But, surely, this is not to take place in the future world. Dr. Whitby says on these texts, "To lie down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, doth not signify to enjoy everlasting happiness in heaven with them, but only to become the sons of Abraham by faith, Gal. 3 : 7, and so to be blessed with faithful Abraham, verse 9, to have the blessing of Abraham coming on them, that they may receive the promise of the Spirit, verse 14, through faith in Christ, to be the seed of Abraham and heirs according to the promise, verse 29, viz., the promise made to Abraham, Gen. 12 : 3, renewed to Isaac, Gen. 26 : 4, and confirmed to Jacob, Gen. 28 : 14, and to be according to Isaac, the children of promise, Gal. 4 :

28. This, says Christ, shall be the blessing of the believing Gentiles; they shall be sons of Abraham, and heirs of the promises made to the patriarchs, and mentioned by all the holy prophets of the Old Testament; whereas, the unbelieving Jews, wanting the faith of Abraham, shall be deprived of the blessings promised to his seed; for they who seek to enter, and shall not be able, because the Master has shut to his door, Luke 13: 24, 25, are those Jews who sought for righteousness by the works of the law and not by faith, and, therefore, found it not, Rom. 9: 31, 32, and 6: 7, who entered not into the rest prepared for them, by reason of their unbelief, Heb. 3: 18, 19; 4: 2, and 5: 8, from whom the kingdom of God was taken away, Matt. 21: 43."

10. It is said of this kingdom, that it should be taken from the Jews and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Matt. 21: 43. The blessings and privileges of the Messiah's reign, or the Gospel dispensation, were designed for the Jews; but they rejected their Messiah, judged themselves "unworthy of everlasting life, and, lo," the apostles "turned to the Gentiles."

11. It is said of the children of this kingdom, that they should be cast out of it. Luke 13: 28, and Matt. 8: 12. But is it to be believed that the children of the kingdom of immortal glory and blessedness are to be cast out?

12. It is represented that the commandments of God are to be kept, and broken, and taught in this kingdom. Matt. 5: 19. But, certainly, we are not to understand that these things are to take place in another world!

13. This kingdom is compared to a man who sowed good seed in his field, but, while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares. Matt. 13: 24—30. But is the kingdom of immortal glory a place where good and bad seed will be sown? and where tares will grow amongst the wheat? It is compared to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field, which grew and became a great tree, so that the fowls of the air lodged in its branches. Matt. 13: 31, 32, and Luke 13: 18. Also to leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened. Matt. 13: 33. These comparisons were designed to illustrate the growth, and progress, and spread, and extension, of this kingdom. If we understand it of a kingdom in another world, we can see no propriety in these comparisons; but if we understand it of Christ's kingdom on earth, all is plain and easy of comprehension. Again, it is likened unto a net which was cast into the sea, and gathered fishes of every kind, both good and bad. Matt. 13: 47, 48. But who believes that both good and bad men, as such, are to be gathered into God's kingdom in another world? It is also likened to a householder, who went to hire laborers in his vineyard, Matt. 20: 1; to a king which made a marriage for his son, Matt. 22: 2, 3, and to ten virgins, five of whom were wise and five foolish, Matt. 25: 1. But, certainly, we are not to suppose that anything like vineyards, or laborers in vineyards, will exist in the immortal world! Nor that weddings will take place there, nor that one-half of the inhabitants of heaven will be wise, and the other half fools!

14. It is said of Christ, that he should gather out of his kingdom all things that offended, and those that did iniquity, Matt. 13: 41. But who believes that offences will be committed, or that iniquity will be practised in the spiritual kingdom on high?

15. Christ assured his disciples that some of them would live to see the kingdom of God come with power: Mark 9: 1; Luke 21: 31. We here remark that the kingdom of God commenced when John and Christ commenced their ministry; but it existed only in its incipient stages. It was not fully and permanently established in the world until the power of the holy people was scattered, and the city and temple of Jerusalem was destroyed. Like the grain of mustard seed, it was to spring forth and grow until it should extend itself so as to afford protection and shelter to all who became its subjects. And it is to continue to increase and extend, until, like the leaven which a woman hid in three measures of meal, the whole mass of mankind are to be leavened by its influence.

16. This kingdom is never defined, by the inspired writers, to signify the kingdom of immortal glory. It will not be disputed that Jesus Christ and Paul understood all about this kingdom. Let us see, then, how they define it. In Luke 17: 20, 21, we read as follows, "And when he [Christ] was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh" [here we see it was something which was coming to the people, not something which they were going to]. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation" [that is, it cannot be seen, it is spiritual]; "neither shall they say, Lo here, or Lo there" [that is, it is not located in any particular place], "for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." In Romans 14: 17, Paul says, "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Here the apostle tells us what it is not, and also what it is. It is not anything which can be ate or drank; but it is righteousness, peace and joy. It matters not, then, whether it is above or below, east, west, north or south; in this world, or another; in time, or in eternity; wherever you find righteousness, peace and joy, there is the kingdom of God.

17. This kingdom cannot be inherited nor enjoyed by the unrighteous, nor by fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners. 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10. None of these characters, as such, can possibly enjoy this kingdom; for they are destitute of righteousness, and this kingdom is a kingdom of righteousness. They are destitute of peace, and this kingdom is a kingdom of peace. They are destitute of joy, and this kingdom is a kingdom of joy. But thousands of these characters have been cleansed from their filthiness, and have entered into the enjoyment of this kingdom. In verse 11, the apostle says, "And such were some of you: but ye are washed, ye are sanctified," &c.

18. No man can enjoy this kingdom until he is made acquainted with, and believes understandingly, the truths of the Gospel. Jesus says, John 3: 3, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The phrase, "born again," was one in common use, among the Jews, to signify conversion from error to truth. It was used in the same sense by our Lord. Unless, therefore, those who are in error are converted from their errors, both of belief and practice, they cannot enter into the enjoyment of this kingdom, for it is a kingdom of truth.

19. This kingdom, or reign of Christ, is finally to end. But not until Christ has brought all intelligent creatures to bow the knee to him, and to confess him Lord. Not until he has subdued and reconciled all things to God. Eph. 1: 9, 10; Phil. 2: 9—11; Col. 1: 19, 20. And in 1 Cor. 15: 24, Paul says, "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father." If the reader will consult the whole of the fifteenth chapter of 1st Corinthians, he will see that this delivering up of the kingdom is not to take place until after the resurrection of all the dead from corruption, weakness and dishonor, to incorruption, power and glory, and the change of all the living from mortal to immortality. Death is to be annihilated and swallowed up in victory; and his sting, which is sin, is to be destroyed. Christ himself is to become subject to God, and God is to become all in all.

SECTION III.

Remarks on the phrases ETERNAL and EVERLASTING LIFE.

If the reader will carefully examine the first and second Sections of this Chapter, he will see that the phrases eternal life and everlasting life are perfectly synonymous. This is evident from the fact that the original phrase is the same, whether it is translated eternal or everlasting life; and, also, from the fact that in those passages where the phrase eternal life occurs, in the parallel passages the phrase everlasting life is used to signify the same thing. Compare Mark 10 : 30 with Luke 18 : 30, and John 3 : 15 with John 3 : 16, and John 5 : 24 with John 6 : 54.

The phrase "eternal life" does not occur in the Old Testament.

It occurs in the New Testament twenty-nine times, and is generally, if not in all cases, used to signify the moral life imparted by the Gospel. The phrase everlasting life occurs but once in the Old Testament, Dan. 12 : 2. In the New, it occurs thirteen times. It is used, as we have seen, to signify the same as the phrase eternal life. It has been supposed that these phrases are used to signify a life to be enjoyed in a future state of existence. The only thing which makes this opinion appear at all plausible is the fact that this life is spoken of as something to be enjoyed in the world to come. See Mark 10 : 30, and Luke 18 · 30. But we remark that in these texts the word which is rendered world is aion ; a word which signifies an age or dispensation. And the phrase "aion to come" is used in the New Testament to signify the reign of the Messiah, or Gospel dispensation. Adam Clarke says, "Olam ha-bo, the world to come, is a constant phrase for the times of the Messiah in the Jewish writers." The following facts will show what is the obvious meaning of the phrases, and that the meaning of them is generally misunderstood.

1. Not one of the scripture writers has ever defined these phrases to signify a life to be enjoyed in a future state of existence.

2. Jesus Christ defines eternal life to consist in a knowledge of God, and of Jesus whom he hath sent, John 17 : 3. Of course, those who by the Gospel are made acquainted with God and Jesus Christ, are in the possession of eternal life. It is certainly fair to allow Jesus to define his own terms and phrases. He certainly knew what was meant by eternal life, and if he was correct in his definition of it, the common opinion of it must be erroneous. We choose to abide by the testimony of Jesus, and to reject the authority of all uninspired men when it comes in contact with that testimony.

3. Persons are frequently spoken of in the New Testament as being in the possession of eternal life. John 6 : 54 ; 10 : 28 ; 1 John 5 : 11, 13 ; John 5 : 24 ; 6 : 47 ; Rom. 6 : 22.

4. In 1 John 3 : 15, it is said, that "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." This certainly implies that men may have the life abiding in them.

5. The words eternal and everlasting are applied to this life, not to express the duration of it, but to express the kind or quality of it. This life is called eternal for the following reasons : 1. To distinguish it from the life enjoyed by those living under the Legal dispensation. That is never called eternal or everlasting life. We have seen that the phrase eternal life does not occur in the Old Testament. The phrase everlasting life occurs but once, Dan. 12: 2, and we have shown, in our examination of that text, that it is used with reference to the life imparted by the Gospel. 2. Because those who are in the possession of this life enjoy it continually, unceasingly, uninterruptedly and perpetually. One definition of the word rendered eternal is perpetual. 3. Because it is a life to be enjoyed in the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ." Christ's kingdom is called everlasting, yet it is to come to an end. "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father," 1 Cor. 15: 24—28. 4. Because it is a life to be enjoyed under the dispensation of the "everlasting Gospel." The Gospel is called everlasting, Rev. 14: 6, yet no one supposes it will be preached throughout the endless ages of eternity 5. Because it is a life imparted by that Gospel which brings "life and immortality to light." The believer in this Gospel lives in the constant enjoyment of a hope "full of immortality," and in the perpetual anticipation of an inheritance "incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

2 Pet. 3 : 15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation.

Jude 1 : 3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation.

Rev. 7 : 10 ; 19 : 1, and 12 : 10.

SECTION II.

Those passages in the NEW TESTAMENT where the words DAMNATION, DAMNED, CONDEMNATION, CONDEMNED, &c., occur.

DAMNATION.—Matt. 23 : 14. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites ! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer : therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

Verse 33. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers! how can ye escape the damnation of hell? [Gehenna.]

Luke 20: 47. Which [Scribes] devour widows' houses, and for a shew make long prayers: the same shall receive greater damnation.

Mark 12: 40. Which devour widows' houses and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

Mark 3: 29. But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation.

John 5: 29. And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

Rom. 3: 8. And not rather (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say), Let us do evil that good may come? whose damnation is just.

Rom. 13: 2. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist, shall receive to themselves damnation.

1 Cor. 11: 29. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

1 Tim. 5: 12. Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

2 Peter 2: 3. And through covetousness shall they [false teachers], with feigned words, make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

Damned.—Mark 16: 16. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned.

Rom. 14: 23. And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith, is sin.

2 Thess. 2: 11, 12. And for this cause [rejecting the truth] God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

Condemnation.—John 3: 16—19. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

John 5: 24. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

Rom. 5: 16. And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

Verse 18. Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.

Rom. 8: 1—3. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh.

1 Cor. 11 : 32—34. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home ; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.

2 Cor. 3 : 9. For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory.

1 Tim. 3 : 6. Not a novice, lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

James 3 : 1. My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation.

James 5 : 12. But let your yea be yea ; and your nay, nay ; lest ye fall into condemnation.

Jude 1 : 4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Luke 6 : 37. Judge not, and ye shall not be judged : condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned : forgive and ye shall be forgiven.

John 8 : 10, 11. When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers ? hath no man condemned thee ? She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee : go, and sin no more.

Titus 3 : 10, 11. A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject ; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

2 Peter 2 : 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly.

SECTION III.

Remarks on the Bible doctrine of Salvation and Damnation.

These remarks are designed to show the contrast between the opinions of men on this subject, and the plain teachings of the Bible. 1. We will speak of salvation. 2. Of damnation.

I. Of Salvation.—The common opinion on this subject is, first, That Jesus Christ came to this world to save mankind in another ; second, That the salvation of the Gospel consists in being saved from the penalty of God's law ; from deserved punishment ; and from an endless hell, or place of misery, in a future state of existence. But to all of these opinions we oppose the following objections, viz.

1. It is nowhere said, in the Bible, that Jesus Christ came to this world to save mankind in another. On the contrary, he himself says, that he came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19: 10; Matt. 18: 11. Not that which was in danger of being lost, nor that which was liable to be lost, but that which was already lost. In Luke 4: 18, 19, he tells us that he came to 'preach the Gospel to the poor; to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.' He also affirms that he came to do the will of God, John 6: 38; and to bear witness to the truth, John 18: 37. But he nowhere informs us that he came to save any man from any danger to which he was exposed in another world.

2. The Bible nowhere informs us that salvation consists in being saved from the penalty of God's law, nor from deserved punishment, nor from a place of endless misery. On the contrary, the salvation of the gospel consists in being saved from darkness, from unbelief, from sin and all its attendant evil consequences. John 12: 46, "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." Gal. 1: 4, "Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father." Titus 2: 14, "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Matt. 1: 21, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."

As mankind have mistaken the nature of salvation, so they have been mistaken in regard to the means by which it is effected. It has been supposed that this salvation is effected by Christ's suffering the penalty due to the sinner, and bearing in his own person the punishment which the guilty only were deserving of. But where could mankind learn such opinions? Certainly not from the Bible; for that nowhere informs us that Jesus suffered the penalty of any law of God whatever; nor that he suffered any punishment which was due to our sins. That Jesus suffered in consequence of our sins is undoubtedly true. But how this could exonerate us from blame, or clear us from guilt, is more than any rational man can possibly understand. How, then, is this salvation effected? Answer, by simply believing the truth. Mankind, in consequence of sin, have become "alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance which is in them" Eph. 4: 18. They are lost in the labyrinths of sin and transgression. Luke 19 : 10. They are ignorant of God, of his character, and of his purposes concerning the final destiny of the human race. 1 Cor. 1 : 21. Jesus came with a message of love, of grace, and of salvation. He came to reveal the true character of God, and to make known his purposes. He came to bear witness to the truth. By believing this truth we exercise a faith which "works by love and purifies the heart," Gal. 5 : 6 ; and we have a hope imparted to us, which enables us to "purify ourselves, even as God is pure." 1 John 3 : 3. By believing this truth we come into the possession of a true knowledge of God, "whom to know is life eternal." John 17 : 3. Jesus came to preach the Gospel, and those who believe this Gospel find it to be the "power of God unto salvation." Rom. 1 : 16. To be saved, is to be redeemed from the bondage of sin, to be born again, and to be made free. All this is effected by the moral power and influence of divine truth. Hence, says our Saviour, John 8 : 32, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Hence, Jesus prayed for his disciples, John 17 : 17, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." John 17 : 19, "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." We learn from this that even sanctification is produced by the influence of truth upon the hearts and minds of the children of men. 1 Peter 1 : 22, 23, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another, with a pure heart fervently : being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 John 5 : 1, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God."

As mankind have been mistaken in regard to the nature of salvation, and in relation to the means by which it is effected, so they have been mistaken in regard to its extent. It has been generally supposed that this salvation will be confined to a very few. But the Bible informs us that Jesus came to save the world, John 3 : 17 ; and he is repeatedly and expressly called the "Saviour of the world." Of God it is said, 1 Tim. 4 : 10, "Who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe." And it is said of him, 1 Tim. 2 : 4, "Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." We have seen that there is a moral power in truth, which renders it capable of saving all who believe it. When, therefore, God's will is accomplished, and all men are brought to the knowledge of the truth, all men will be saved. Jesus says, in John 6 : 45, "It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man, therefore, that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." When all are taught of God, all will be taught the truth; even that truth which maketh free; and all will be saved by its mighty power.

But, although God is the prospective Saviour of all men, yet he is the special Saviour of those that believe now. The difference between the believer and the unbeliever is simply this: the believer is saved; the unbeliever is to be saved. God is the special Saviour of believers because believers are saved now. They enjoy a salvation which the unbelievers know not of. Hence, they are spoken of in the Bible as being already saved. Luke 7 : 50, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." Rom. 8 : 24, "For we are saved by hope." 1 Cor. 1 : 18, "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God." 1 Cor. 15 : 2, "By which [the Gospel] also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you." 2 Cor. 2 : 15, "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish." Eph. 2 : 5, "By grace ye are saved." Eph. 2 : 8, "For by grace are ye saved." Titus 3 : 5, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us." 2 Tim. 1 : 9, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling." Eph. 1 : 11, "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance," &c. Eph. 1 : 3, "Who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." Eph. 2 : 1, "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. 2 : 6, "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Rev. 21 : 24, "And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it" [the holy city, by which is signified the Gospel dispensation]. 1 Peter 1 : 9, "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." Gal. 3 : 9, "They which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." Heb. 4 : 3, "We which have believed do enter into rest." In John 5 : 24, believers are said to be in the possession of everlasting life; and in Rom 8 : 1, it is said, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." In Rom. 8 : 2, believers are said to be "free from the law of sin and death;" and in Col. 1: 13, they are said to be "delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son." On the other hand, unbelievers are said to be "condemned," to be "dead in trespasses and sins," and to be "without hope, and without God in the world;" as we shall now show.

II. Of Damnation. — Damnation is supposed by many to consist in being sent to a place of misery after death, called hell. But to this opinion we object as follows:

1. The Bible nowhere gives any such definition of the word damnation. The original word rendered damnation is in many places rendered judge, judged, punishment, condemn, condemned, and condemnation. It occurs frequently in the New Testament, but is not used in a single instance to signify punishment in another world.

2. It is contrary to the definition which the scripture writers themselves give of this term. Paul says, Rom. 5: 18, "Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." The word which is here rendered condemnation is the same that is rendered damnation in every instance where that word occurs in the New Testament. Now, Paul says, in this text, that damnation had actually come on all men; but certainly all men had not gone to a place of endless misery, called hell. On the contrary, millions of the human race were at that very time alive, and on the earth. If, therefore, they were damned at all, it must have been here, in this present world. Again, if Paul used the word condemnation here to signify endless misery, then he represents that this misery had come upon all men. But this was contrary to fact. Besides, if endless misery had come on all men, how could it be followed by the free gift of justification unto life? Certainly there would be no room for it. And as Paul says this free gift came after the condemnation, hence, he did not use the original word which is rendered damnation in the New Testament, to signify endless damnation, nor any other damnation than that which is experienced in this life. Our Saviour frequently used the words condemnation and damnation; but he nowhere says that any man, or any set of men, would be damned in a future state of existence. On the contrary, he defines the word thus: John 3: 19, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." And of the unbeliever he affirms, John 3: 18, "He that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Again he says, John 9: 39, "For judgment am I come into the world," and in John 12: 31, "Now is the judgment of this world." Peter says, 1 Pet. 4: 17, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God." John the Revelator says, Rev. 14: 6, 7, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." The word which in these texts is rendered judgment is the same that is rendered damned and damnation in the New Testament. Jesus came into the world, then, to execute damnation; not in another world, but here. The hour of damnation had come in the days of John. The damnation of the world commenced eighteen hundred years ago, and first began at the house of God. Paul speaks of damnation in this world, but says not a word about damnation anywhere else. He speaks of some "whose damnation is just." Rom. 3: 8. Of some who ate and drank damnation. 1 Cor. 11: 29. Of some who were experiencing damnation. 1 Tim 5: 12. Jude speaks of some who were ordained to experience the condemnation they were then in. Jude 1: 4. And Peter speaks of some "whose damnation slumbered not." 2 Peter 2: 3.

Mark 16: 16, has long been considered a standing proof of the doctrine of damnation in a future world. We will now close with an examination of this text, trusting that our remarks on it will make the Bible doctrine of damnation perfectly plain. This text reads thus:

Mark 16: 16, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

The questions to be considered are: 1. What is it that we are required to believe, the belief of which is necessary to salvation? 2. What is the nature of the salvation promised to the believer and where is it to be experienced? 3. What is the nature of the damnation threatened to the unbeliever, and where is it to be experienced, and how long?

1. What must we believe? Ask the Calvinist, the Arminian and the Universalist, what we must believe, and they will all tell you, and tell you very truly, too, and in the language of Scripture, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Ask them if our simply believing that there was such a person as Jesus Christ will be sufficient, and they will all tell you no. And they will assign as a reason for this, that a man may believe that there was such a person, and at the same time believe him to have been an impostor. So far, then, these three classes of Christians, embracing all who profess the Christian name, are perfectly agreed. And if you ask, What then must we believe about Jesus Christ? they will tell you that every man is required to believe that Jesus Christ is his Saviour. But if you push your inquiries a little further, and ask, as an individual, Is Jesus Christ my Saviour? you have now arrived to a point on which the Calvinist will differ from the Arminian, the Arminian from the Calvinist, and the Universalist from both. If you put the question to the Calvinist, Is Jesus my Saviour? if he answers in consistency with his creed, he must tell you Yes, if you are one of the elect. Before you can believe that Jesus is your Saviour, then, you must believe something anterior to this, and that is, that you are one of the elect. But what evidence can be presented to the mind of the sinner which will enable him to believe that he is one of the elect? No man but a Pharisee can possibly believe this. That man's organ of self-esteem must reach nigh unto heaven, who can believe that he is selected, out of the great mass of mankind, as one of God's chosen favorites. Hence, upon the principles of Calvinism, there are no grounds of belief. All belief which is worthy of the name, is regulated by evidence. But, in this case, no evidence can possibly be presented to the mind of any rational man, which will enable him to believe. Besides, if the individual is one of the elect, he will be saved whether he believes Christ is his Saviour or not; and if he is not one of the elect, if he believes he is his Saviour, he believes a lie. Of course, in this case, his faith cannot save him. If he was reprobated to damnation before the foundation of the world, of course he will not be damned for not believing that Jesus is his Saviour.

If you ask the Arminian, Is Jesus Christ my Saviour? he must tell you No, not unless you believe that he is. Hence, he requires you to make truth as you go along. Jesus, he tells you, is not your Saviour now, but, by believing that he is, you can convert him into your Saviour. But if Jesus is not your Saviour, why should you be required to believe that he is? If he is not your Saviour, why should you be damned for believing that he is not? If he is not your Saviour, how can your believing that he is make him so? If he is your Saviour, and you believe he is not, you believe a lie. If he is not your Saviour, and you believe he is not, you believe the truth. According to this theory, then, we are required to believe that which is false, in order to be saved; and, by believing that falsehood, we convert it into truth. Again, according to this theory. God saves us for believing a lie, and damns us for believing the truth.

If you ask the Universalist what you must believe in order to be saved, he will tell you to believe the Gospel. In the verse immediately preceding the text, our Lord says to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Then follows the text, "He that believeth," &c. He that believeth what? Evidently the Gospel, which the disciples were commissioned to preach to every creature. But he that truly believes in Jesus will of course believe his Gospel. Hence, the Universalist will tell you to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the propitiation "for the sins of the whole world;" who "tasted death for every man;" and "who gave himself a ransom for all." He will tell you to believe in Jesus, who is the Saviour of the world; and to believe in God, "who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe." He will tell you to believe that Jesus Christ is your Saviour; and to believe it, because it is true.

2. What is the nature of the salvation promised to the believer? We have already shown that it is a salvation from ignorance, darkness, unbelief and sin. Well, where is it to be experienced? Answer, in the place where, and at the time when, faith is exercised. This is abundantly proved in our remarks on salvation, and requires no further proof here.

3. What is the nature of the damnation threatened to the unbeliever? It is a sense of conscious condemnation, to be involved in ignorance of God's character; to be in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; to be involved in moral death, to be dead in trespasses and sins, and to be without hope and without God in the world. Well, where is this damnation to be experienced? Like the salvation of the believer, the damnation of the unbeliever must be experienced in the place where, and at the time when, mankind are unbelievers. Again, how long must this damnation be experienced? Answer, just as long as the unbelief continues, and no longer. Perhaps one-half or more of the believers in Christ now were once unbelievers. Paul himself was once a noted unbeliever, and while he was so he was damned. This is sufficiently evident from the feelings and disposition which he manifested. No man can possess the Pharisaic, bigoted and murderous disposition of Saul of Tarsus, without being damned. That man is sufficiently damned who can harbor such feelings in his bosom. While Paul was an unbeliever, therefore, he was damned; but the moment he exercised faith in the Gospel, that moment his damnation ceased. Now, as we have shown that God's will is that all men shall be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth; when that will is accomplished, there will be no unbelievers among men, for all shall know God from the least unto the greatest. Unbelief, which is the cause of damnation, will be removed; and damnation, which is the effect, will cease with the cause that produced it. Dr. Campbell says on this text, that the word damned "is not a just version of the Greek word. The term damned, with us (he says), relates solely to the doom which shall be pronounced upon the wicked at the last day. This cannot be affirmed, in truth, of the Greek katakrino, which corresponds exactly to the English word condemn." To the same import is the testimony of Horne, Cappe, and others.

CHAPTER XVIII.

ON THE CASE OF JUDAS.

SECTION I

Those passages which show the case of Judas.

Acts 1 : 16—20. Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of David, spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. For he was numbered with us, and hath obtained part of this ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and, falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem, insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue Aceldama, that is to say, the field of blood. For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and his bishopric let another take.

Ps. 41 : 9. Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.

John 13 : 18. I speak not of you all ; I know whom I have chosen : but that the scripture may be fulfilled, he that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me.

Matt. 26 : 24. The Son of Man goeth, as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed ! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

Mark 14 : 21. The Son of Man indeed goeth, as it is written of him : but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed ! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

John 17 : 12. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name : those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled.

Acts 1 : 25. That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

John 6 : 70. Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil ?

Matt. 26 : 14—16. Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, and said unto them, what will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? and they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

Verses 47—50. And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people. Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; hold him fast. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him. And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

John 13 : 2. And supper being ended [the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him].

Verses 26, 27. Jesus answered, He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. And after the sop, Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.

Matt. 27 : 3—5. Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

SECTION II.

Closing Remarks, and a Statement of Facts concerning Judas

People who have been trained to a belief in the doctrine of endless misery are in the habit of referring to the case of Judas to prove the truth of their doctrine. But we ask them candidly to consider, first, the object and end of Christ's mission on earth; the object of which is universally acknowledged to be the salvation of man from sin and death. Could Christ have accomplished that end, without yielding up his life, in sacrifice, on the cross? And could he have been delivered up and crucified, without the proper means to effect it? Certainly not. And if God purposed to save man by the death of his Son, did he not also determine the means by which his death should be brought about? See Acts 4 : 26—28. "The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against his Christ. For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." See also Acts 2: 23. "Him (Christ) being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." From these facts we learn, that the whole process of the delivering up, the counsel, and death of Christ, were all previously determined by the hand and counsel of God. Can we, then, suppose that any part of it could have been subverted or set aside by man? Or can we conclude that Judas must be endlessly miserable, for being instrumental in the accomplishment of that end, which God had designed? Certainly not. Peter says, "Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." Judas delivered him up to the counsel of the Jews; of course, the act which Judas performed was determined of God. Now, to suppose that Judas must be made miserable without end, miserable without the means of reforming from the error of his ways; for that which must have been performed, or God's purposes baffled, and the world lost! we think is darkening to the character of God, and degrading to his purposes. Could either of the disciples have viewed the purpose and plan of God, in saving the world, in its proper light; and, seeing no one to step forward as a means, he had volunteered his services as a means in that fearful tragedy, would he not rather have immortalized than degraded his name? But, as we have no probable evidence that the above was the case with Judas, we must suppose him to have been influenced by some other motive, which [equally effected the purpose of God, but] in its nature and operations greatly tended to blacken and degrade his character. But as God overrules means to effect his own purposes, and eventually superintended the great and memorable events with which Judas stood connected, does it not betray a weakness, and an unphilosophical mind in man, to say that God's purposes are so mystified, his plans so deranged, that he eventually must, yea will, eternally damn any of his creatures for the part they may have acted in the drama of life? Does not God overrule all things for good? And will he not overrule even that event, for the ultimate good of Judas? Our Saviour, when upon the cross, prayed for the whole band of his murderers and offenders, saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Are not the prayers of our Saviour, all, eventually and effectually, answered Most certainly, if his own words be true. He says to his Father

I thank thee that thou hast heard me: and I knew that thou hearest me always. John 11: 42. But it is said Judas was "the son of perdition" [ill fortune]. Does this show that Judas is or will bo eternally lost? No. Judas was a man of loss and ill fortune. He was lost to the apostleship and ministry, in which he had previously shared. He was considered a traitor, and abandoned by the church, and by the world. Son of perdition, is a Hebraism, signi fying one that is lost, or a man of ill fortune. All this Judas effectually and sufficiently experienced in this world. Judas was also called a devil (diabolos); that is, an opposer or untrue. But will this eternally damn him? Christ says to Peter, Matt. 16: 23, "Get behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me," &c. Yet no one supposes that Peter is forever lost. But it is said, Matt. 26: 24, "it had been good for that man if he had not been born." These words are not strictly and literally to be interpreted, as they were a proverbial form of speech among the Jews; and every one ought to know that proverbs are not to be literally taken. Dr. Clarke shows the above to be correct. At the end of chap. 1, in Acts, he also says, "The utmost that can be said of the case of Judas is this: he committed a heinous act of sin and ingratitude, but he repented and did what he could to undo his wicked act; he had committed the sin that involves the death of the body; but who can say (if mercy was offered to Christ's murderers, . . .) that the same mercy could not be extended to wretched Judas?" He further states that the chief priests were actually more guilty than Judas; and if mercy could have been extended to them (which the Dr. admits was), then Judas did not die out of its reach. "And I contend further" (says the Dr.), "that there is no positive evidence of the final damnation of Judas in the sacred text." See Paige's Selections. Jeremiah cursed the day in which he was born. He says, "Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed," &c. See Jer. 20: 14—18. Pious Job also says, "Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, there is a man child conceived. Let that day be darkness; let not the light shine upon it," &c. See Job 3: 1—12. Now, no one will contend that righteous Jeremiah, or pious Job, have gone to an endless hell; yet they curse the day of their birth, and contend that it would have been good had they not been born. But it is said, Judas "hanged himself," Matt. 27: 5, "And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself." This expression appears to contradict what is said in Acts 1: 18, "Now this man [Judas] purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and, falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." This account of his end is evidently correct. There is no evidence that Judas hung himself, or that he took his own life in any way. The difficulty is with the expression, "hanged himself," in Matthew. The Greek word apegxato, rendered "hanged himself," has not of necessity that signification. It appears to have the following meaning: "he [Judas] went out, being suffocated, or strangled with grief. Campbell renders it "strangled himself;" and says "it may be rendered, was suffocated." Wakefield's version is, "was choked with anguish." Clarke says, "it may be rendered, was strangled." This harmonizes the two passages, and removes the apparent difficulty. Judas was evidently mortified and grieved to excess. In verses 3, 4, it is said, that "when he saw that he [Christ] was condemned, he repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that." Upon hearing this answer, Judas cast down the pieces of silver and went out, not only repenting, but with such highly-grieved, mortified, and wounded feelings, that he was completely suffocated and choked with grief, to that degree, that he actually fell headlong, bursting asunder, and thus expiring in a moment of grief, repentance, and agony. What more pitiable could his condition have been? and what stronger evidence of sorrow and compunction could have been manifested? and he, who feels to pursue and follow him, even into eternity, and further torment him there, must be destitute of all sympathy, and even humanity itself. The motive of Judas in betraying, or delivering up Christ to the Jews, could not have been for the purpose of having him crucified. Judas knew that his Master possessed the power of delivering himself from his enemies, and this he had often seen him perform; but he might have felt somewhat avaricious, and designed the money for his own individual use, but more probably (as he was their treasurer, carried the bag, &c.) that he designed it for the use of the fraternity, or the benefit of the church. But when he saw the result, he was disappointed; he saw that he had misjudged, and was chagrined, mortified, grieved, and repentant. What more could he have done, on learning his own frailty and misdoings?

But is is said by the unreflecting, that Judas has gone to an endless hell, because of the expression in Acts 1: 25, "that he might go to his own place." Admitting this phrase to allude to Judas, and what does it prove? Certainly, not that he has gone to an endless hell; for no such place is defined or taught in the Bible. And if it were, it was not pointed to as the place of Judas; for "his own place" could signify no more than to his former state or condition; or, if applied to his death, could imply no more than that he had gone to the state of the dead in general; independently of either rewards or punishments; as is evidently taught in Eccl. 3: 20, "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

But it is thought by some of the best Partialist writers, that the expression, "his own place," does not allude to Judas at all; but to Matthias. Dr. Hammond, Priestly, and others, are of that opinion. Dr. Clarke says, "Should the 25th verse be urged against this possibility (i. e., of the salvation of Judas), because it is there said that Judas fell from his ministry and apostleship, that he might go to his own place, and that this place is hell, I answer (1), it remains to be proved that this place means hell; and (2), it is not clear that the words are spoken of Judas at all, but of Matthias; his own place meaning that vacancy in the apostolate to which he was then elected." Paige's Selections.

The Apostles appeared to be anxious to fill the vacancy, in the loss of Judas. They made choice of two, Justus and Matthias. They then prayed — (not that the Lord would damn Judas — but) that the Lord would show them which of the two should succeed in filling the vacancy; that he (the chosen one) might go to his own place. All the arguments which are brought forward to prove the endless torment of Judas do utterly fail. We might as well, in reality, undertake to prove the endless ruin of any other man, as that of Judas. Hundreds have been more wicked than Judas, of whom it is believed that they are now in heaven. Judas was wicked, and, like every other sinner, suffered in proportion to the nature and demerit of his crime.

mon with all the other apostles, he received the power of working miracles, as evidence of his divine appointment to the apostleship. We have no reason to doubt his zeal, or distrust his faithfulness and assiduity, at least until the time of the betrayal. Long before Judas had transgressed, and before any other than Judas was known as filling his place, Christ, in answer to Peter, said, "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. 19: 28. Christ must here have alluded to the twelve, of which Judas was one, and who also had followed Christ in the regeneration, and was to sit upon one of the twelve thrones. The following facts may now be stated. 1st. Judas was actually one of the twelve apostles, and chosen as such, by Christ himself. 2d. That for a long time, at least, he was as true to his trust, and acted his part in as good faith, as did any other apostle. 3d. That the part he took in the betraying of Christ was the part for which God had raised him up, and that which was predetermined by the counsel of Heaven. 4th. That notwithstanding he was a sinner, yet, that no man ever left the world manifesting greater sorrow for sin, more compunction of heart, deeper contrition, or more regret for offences, than did Judas. 5th. That there is no shade of evidence that Judas will be eternally miserable. 6th. That, in common with all transgressors, he suffered in this world the just demerit of all his crimes. 7th. That the last account of him is, he had gone the way of all the earth — he was dead: and if any one can give a further or better account of him, we will kindly receive it.

CHAPTER XIX.

BLASPHEMY AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST

SECTION I.

Those passages wherein the expression, BLASPHEMY AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST, occurs.

Matt. 12 : 31, 32. Wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men : but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him : but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world [aioni], neither in the world [or age] to come.

Mark 3 : 28—30. Verily I say unto you, all sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation [aioniou kriseos] ; because they said, he hath an unclean spirit.

SECTION II.

Remarks on the Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

The subject of the "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" is often brought as an insurmountable objection to the doctrine of universal holiness and happiness. In the first place, we will inquire, upon the admission that the above texts teach the doctrine of endless misery, how many can possibly be exposed to that state ?

Christ, in the first place, positively affirms that "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." "Verily I say unto you, all sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme :" or, whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him. See those passages in the preceding Section. Now it is positively declared by him who cannot lie, that all manner of sins and blasphemies, wherewith soever the sons of men shall blaspheme, shall be forgiven them : but whosoever speaketh or blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Among all the sins and blasphemies ever perpetrated on earth, or any which may be committed in all coming time, there is but one solitary exception ; viz., the sin against the Holy Ghost. Reader, how many suppose you ever committed this sin ? When this question is settled, we have data from which to determine how many will eventually suffer endless misery. What shall we do with all the wicked rebels, from Cain down to the period of our Saviour ? For the Holy Ghost was not presented, either for man to receive or reject, until the day of miracles by Christ. And what shall we do with all the wicked unbelievers, drunkards, murderers and revilers, from Christ's day down to the present period ? And how shall we dispose of all the blasphemous infidels and atheists, from the beginning of the world until now ? For all manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven unto men, with one exception. Upon the premises we have admitted the only result is this : none ever were, or ever can be, sent to hell, save those very few of the Jews who stood by, saw Christ work miracles and accused him of doing the same by the power of Beelzebub, the prince of devils. It is not possible to involve any others, for all, excepting those, "shall be forgiven." In Mark 3 : 22, it is said, "And the Scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of devils casteth he out devils." The sole foundation and only reason why our Saviour made the expression, "he that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness," is based in this verse and in the expression, "by the prince of devils casteth he out devils." As evidence of this, observe the 30th verse ; after having stated the result of their expression (which was sin against the Holy Ghost), he adds, "Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit." This solves the problem why the expression, "sin against the Holy Ghost," was made at all ; and necessarily confines that sin to the very few who had the privilege of seeing him perform those miracles by the power of God, and at the same time attributed it to the power of Beelzebub, the prince of devils. This is the only conclusion to which we possibly can arrive. Hence, upon the admission of the common opinion of this subject, it proves too much for those who adopt it. It would reduce their hell to a mere speck, and its inmates to a simple unit. It would also overstock heaven with millions on millions of those which they suppose to be only ill and hell deserving.

In Mark it is said of him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, that he "hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation." Now, there is no language here expressed that alludes to eternity. It is simply signified, that such an one would not be likely to receive forgiveness or amendment in that age; consequently would be in danger of the judgment or condemnation coming upon them. They actually were in danger of (aioniou kriseos) the judgment of that age, which was certain to overtake all the hardened, heedless and disobedient.

Matthew says that such an one shall not be forgiven in this world (aioni) or in that to come. Pearce, on this subject, says, "Neither in this world, &c. Rather, neither in this age nor in the age to come; that is, neither in this age when the law of Moses subsists, nor in that also when the kingdom of heaven, which is at hand, shall succeed to it. This is a strong way of expressing how difficult a thing it was for such a sinner to obtain pardon. . . . Christ does not say to him that blasphemeth and repenteth, but to him that blasphemeth; and, therefore, he means to him that continueth in his blasphemy, for with God there is no sin that is unpardonable." Wakefield says, "age; aioni; that is, the Jewish dispensation, which was then in being, nor the Christian, which was going to be established." Clarke says, "Neither in this world, &c. Though I follow the common translation, yet I am fully satisfied the meaning of the word is, neither in this dispensation, viz., the Jewish, nor in that which is to come, viz., the Christian." The Dr. also says, under the same head, that "when our Lord says that such a sin hath no forgiveness, he is to be understood that the body shall be destroyed, as under the Jewish dispensation; while mercy may be extended to the soul." He also adds, "The punishment of presumptuous sins under the Jewish law, to which our Lord evidently alludes, certainly did not extend to the damna- tion of the soul, though the body was destroyed; therefore, I think that though there was no such forgiveness to be extended to this crime as to absolve the man from the punishment of temporal death, yet, on repentance, mercy might be extended to the soul, and every sin may be repented of under the Gospel dispensation." Com. in loc. See Paige's Selections.

The foregoing quotations are sufficient to show that Partialist commentators themselves, do not suppose that the sin against the Holy Ghost is unpardonable; or, that the doctrine of endless misery is taught thereby. The fact is this, their blasphemy was a slanderous reproach against Christ and the power by which he cast out demons (cured diseased); and the nature of this crime was so malignant, that justly they deserved strict condemnation, either under the administration of that age or that to come, the Gospel. Such was the turpitude of their hearts, that they were actually in danger of remaining unmoved, and consequently of suffering the common calamity of their age and nation, as a just retribution of their slanderous and malignant conduct. No intimations are here or anywhere else given, that God will eternally cast off or damn any one. Neither is there such a sentence as "the finally impenitent," in all the word of God.

CHAPTER XX.

PRINCIPAL ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF UNIVERSALISM, ETC.

A brief Statement of the Principal Arguments in favor of Universalism; also, Objections to those Arguments, and Replies to those Objections.

We shall only state these arguments, objections, &c., in brief, and leave the reader to carry out the reasoning. We argue the truth of the doctrine of universal salvation from, —

1. The NATURE, CHARACTER and ATTRIBUTES of GOD. The nature of God is LOVE. This love is infinite in degree, unlimited in extent, and endless in duration. It therefore extends to every sentient being that ever did, does now, or ever will, exist in the universe. In character, God is kind, good, benevolent, merciful and just. God's attributes are omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence, infinite wisdom, holiness, justice, mercy and truth. Every quality, characteristic and attribute of God, is under the supreme control and direction of goodness or love. God is the primary cause of all things. He is, therefore, the author of man's existence; and, consequently, his Creator. God never acts without a design. He must, therefore, have had some design in creating man. God is impartial. He has, therefore, the same design in creating all men, that he had in creating the first man. God is good; and no good being can act with a bad design. The design which he had in creating man, and the design which he has in creating all men, must therefore be good. To create beings for misery, would be to create them with a bad design. To create beings for happiness, would be to create them with a good design. Therefore, God created man for happiness; and the existence which he conferred upon him, he designed to be, on the whole, a blessing and not a curse.

Objection. — "This reasoning is a priori, and a priori reasoning on this subject is inadmissible; inasmuch, as by a regular process of a priori reasoning from the nature and character of God, we should come to the conclusion that God would have excluded all evil from the universe. But this he has not done; therefore, a priori reasoning from the attributes of God is inconclusive, and extremely fallacious."

Answer. — It is not true that a course of a priori reasoning from the attributes of God would lead us to the conclusion that he would have excluded all evil from the universe. Let us see. God is the only infinite being in the universe. Only one infinite being can exist in the universe. God is the only standard of absolute perfection in the universe. God cannot create a being equal to himself. If, therefore, he creates beings at all, he must create them inferior to himself. Well, just in proportion as they are inferior to himself, just in that proportion they must fall short of perfection; and just in proportion as they fall short of perfection, just in that proportion they must partake of imperfection. Imperfection is an evil; and, as imperfection exists necessarily, hence God could not exclude all evil from the universe.

To this it may be replied, that "according to this reasoning, evil exists necessarily, and if the present existence of evil can be reconciled with the divine benevolence, the endless existence of evil can be as well and as easily reconciled with that benevolence." Answer: — The evil of imperfection undoubtedly exists necessarily, but it by no means follows that all evil exists necessarily. This subject has been involved in a great deal of obscurity and confusion, in consequence of the habit which philosophers and divines have fallen into, of classing all evils under one general head. Now, the fact is, that there are three different kinds of evils in the world. 1. Those which exist necessarily. 2. Those which exist by permission or appointment of God, for wise and benevolent purposes. 3. Those which may be said to be of our own procuring. Those of the first class must exist to a greater or less extent, as long as created beings are in existence, though they may constantly be growing less and less. For instance, man can never be as powerful as God; he can never be as wise as God, nor can he ever be as good as God. Yet, he may be, throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity, constantly approximating towards the perfections of God but, after all, he will never attain to the point of absolute perfection. Those evils which exist by permission or appointment of God for wise and benevolent purposes, will of course be removed when the benevolent object of their existence is attained. Those which are of our own procuring will grow less and less as mankind progress in knowledge, wisdom and virtue. To suppose that any evils which are under God's control exist as an end (which they must, if they exist endlessly), is to impeach the goodness and benevolence of God. To suppose that those evils exist as a means of accomplishing more good than could otherwise be brought about (which is undoubtedly true), is to suppose that they are limited and finite; and that they will eventually terminate in the good, to accomplish which, they exist. But it will be said, "God has been just as good in all time past as he is now, and he is just as good now as he ever will be; and as he has in time past, and does now permit evil to exist, therefore, we have no proof but that such will always continue to be the case." Answer: — If we admit this reasoning to be correct, we have only to carry it out, and we overthrow the brightest hopes of all professing Christians. For instance, Christians hope to be eventually delivered from the power and dominion of sin; but, as they are subject to sin now, therefore they always will be. Christians hope to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God; but, as they are subject to the bondage of corruption now, therefore they always will be. Christians hope to be placed, eventually, beyond the reach of death; but, as they are subject to death now, therefore they always will be. Christians hope to be placed beyond the reach of pain, sickness and sorrow; but, as they are subject to these evils now, therefore they always will be. If the present existence of sin, sorrow, sickness and pain, can be reconciled with the divine benevolence, then, according to the mode of reasoning adopted by the objector, the endless existence of these evils can as well and as easily be reconciled with that benevolence. And, if the present existence of any evil which is under God's control proves that evil will exist endlessly, then the same argument will prove the endless existence of all evils which have ever been seen, felt or experienced, by man. In that case, what becomes of the hopes and expectations of all benevolent and good men? Again, this reasoning comes in contact with the plain declarations of the Bible. Sin is an evil, and it exists now; but the Bible instructs us to "behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." It assures us that Christ will "finish the transgression and make an end of sin." Death is an evil, and it reigns triumphant over man now; but the Bible declares that "death shall be swallowed up in victory;" and that "the last enemy, death, shall be destroyed." Sorrow, sickness and pain, are evils, and they are experienced in a greater or less degree by all now; but the Bible affirms that the period will arrive when "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." Man is a strange compound of good and evil, and who can doubt that God designed his present existence to be a mixed state of good and evil, pleasure and pain, happiness and misery? He who doubts this must doubt the evidence of his own senses. If God did not design this, one thing is certain, he has been most wofully disappointed. In view of the above considerations, it evidently appears that man is a progressive being; that the present is only the incipient stage of his existence, and that he is destined to rise higher and higher in the scale of intellectual and moral improvement, and approximate nearer and nearer to the perfections of his Creator.

2. We argue the truth of Universalism from the NATURE of MAN. Man is a physical, intellectual and moral being. He respects virtue, whether he practises it or not. He instinctively loves happiness and dreads misery. He is a progressive being, and is susceptible of very great cultivation, refinement and improvement. This being the nature of man, the period must eventually arrive when he will have learned, by his own experience, what course of conduct his own interest dictates to him to pursue; and, from his love of happiness and dread of misery, he will practise virtue on the one hand, and avoid the practice of vice on the other. Besides, sin in man has its origin in the flesh, or in his animal nature, and this animal nature is destined to be destroyed. Nothing but the spiritual nature of man can survive the tomb. Hence, in a future state of existence he will be free from those passions, appetites and desires, which in this world lead him astray and entice him from the path of virtue.

3. From the NATURE of SIN and MISERY. Sin and misery are inseparably connected. Sin is a cause, and misery the effect. Sin being an act of a finite being, is, therefore, finite and limited. Of course, the effect must be limited also. Sin tends to misery, and misery to the death of the miserable. Therefore, sin and misery, instead of possessing a self-perpetuating power, carry with them the seeds of their own dissolution. Hence, sin and misery must event ually be brought to an end.

4. From the NATURE of HOLINESS and HAPPINESS. These also are inseparably connected. And both are qualities of the Deity; hence, they possess a self-perpetuating power, and are, therefore, ever-enduring in their nature.

5. From the NATURE and OBJECT of PUNISHMENT. Punishment signifies correction. And correction signifies to reform and make better. It is prospective, and not retrospective. It is not revenge. It is not cruelty. It is not vindictive, but parental; and the fact of its being inflicted is a proof of the goodness of the Being who inflicts it, rather than an objection against it.

6. From the direct and positive teachings of the BIBLE. Our arguments from the Bible will be arranged under distinct heads.

1st. The doctrine of Universalism is based on the promises of GOD. Gen. 3: 15, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." This language was addressed to the serpent, and this serpent is evidently an emblematic representation of the lusts, passions and desires of mankind. The seed of the serpent is sin. James 1: 15, "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin." James 4: 1, "From whence come wars and fighting, among you? come they not hence, even of your own lusts that war in your members?" A bruise upon the heel of man is not mortal, but a bruise upon the head of the serpent produces death. This text, then, plainly teaches that although man will receive an injury from the influence of his passions, appetites and desires, yet the seed of the woman will heal the wound, and destroy the cause which inflicted it. It is acknowledged that by the "seed of the woman," here, is meant Jesus Christ

Well, Christ is to destroy the serpent or devil and all his works. 1 John 3: 8, "For this purpose the Son of man was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Heb. 2: 14, 15, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he [Christ] also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Who or what has the power of death? Answer: James 1: 15, "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

God promised to Abraham that he would bless all mankind in his seed. Gen. 12: 3, "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. 22: 18, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." This promise was renewed to Isaac and Jacob, Gen. 26: 4, and 28: 14.

Objection 1. — "These promises are on conditions; and, unless these conditions are complied with on the part of the creature, the promised blessing will not be conferred."

Answer. — No conditions are either expressed or implied in these promises. If there were any conditions about it, God knew it; and he would not have promised in this unconditional manner, unless he had foreseen that all the conditions on which hung suspended the fulfilment of the promises would be complied with on the part of all who are included in the promise.

Objection 2. — "These promises relate only to temporal blessings, to be conferred on mankind in this life."

Answer. — Thousands and millions of the human family have lived and died without ever knowing that such a person as Jesus Christ (who is the seed spoken of in these promises) ever existed; and, consequently, without ever receiving any blessing through him whatever. Now, to suppose that these promises relate to temporal blessings, is to suppose that God has made promises which he has never fulfilled, and never can fulfil. Besides, Peter understood these promises to relate to spiritual blessings, even to the salvation of men from sin. When addressing the murderers of Jesus Christ, he says, Acts 3: 25, 26, "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blest. Unto you first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." Again, these promises are expressly said to constitute the Gospel. Gal. 3: 8, "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." If these promises constitute the Gospel, of course they must relate to the spiritual blessings to be conferred on all mankind.

OBJECTION 3. — "These promises are to all the families of the earth. If, therefore, only one out of every family is saved and all the rest are lost, it will be a fulfilment of the promise."

ANSWER. — Peter understood by the phrase, "all families," all mankind. Acts 3: 25, "And in thy seed shall all the KINDREDS of the earth be blessed." Point us to an individual who is not related to any nation, tribe, kindred, tongue or people, and we will admit that he is not included in this promise. But, as there never was nor never can be any such person, hence every individual of the human race is included in this promise.

OBJECTION 4. — "The unbelief of some men is so great, that these promises to them can never be fulfilled."

ANSWER. — The unbelief of man cannot overthrow the faith of God, nor convert truth into falsehood. Rom. 3: 3, 4, "For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? GOD FORBID: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar."

OBJECTION 5. — "The penalty of God's law is endless misery; and, as this penalty will be inflicted on those who do not repent in this life, and as thousands live and die unrepentant, hence these promises to them can never be fulfilled."

ANSWER. — God has never annexed the penalty of endless misery to any law which he has given to man. Besides, there is no law of God, no penalty annexed to any law of his, nor any punishment ever threatened by Jehovah, which will prevent the fulfilment of these promises. Gal. 3: 15—17, "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is CHRIST. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, CANNOT DISANNUL, that it should make the promise of none effect." See also Gal. 3: 21, "Is the law then against the promises of God? GOD FORBID." That there is an absolute certainty of the fulfilment of these promises, is further evident from Paul's testimony in 2 Cor. 1: 18—20, "But as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay. For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For ALL the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen unto the glory of God by us." No language can more clearly express the fact, that in relation to these promises, as well as all other promises of God, there are no buts, nor ifs, nor ands, nor conditions, about it; but, on the contrary, they are yea and Amen; and are, therefore, absolutely certain and sure of being fulfilled.

2d. This doctrine is founded on the immutable oath of JEHOVAH. God has pledged himself by his oath to fulfil his promises. Gen. 22: 16—18, "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Isa. 45: 22—24, "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else. I have sworn by myself, the word has gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. Surely shall say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed." Heb. 6: 16—19, "For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, CONFIRMED IT WITH AN OATH; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail."

OBJECTION 1.—"The quotation from Isaiah proves that some of those who will bow the knee to God shall be made ashamed, and the idea of shame is inconsistent with the idea of salvation.'

ANSWER.—Are not those who are converted to the Gospel, and who are reformed by its influence, ashamed of their former course of conduct? and if they have ever been incensed against God, are they not ashamed of it, when they come to understand his character? Most certainly they are. But, surely, this is no bar to their salvation. The fact is, to bring the sinner to a sense of shame, is an important step towards his reformation and salvation. That the shame here spoken of, which will be experienced by those who have been incensed against God, will be no bar to their salvation, may be seen by consulting Ezek. 16: 62, 63, "And I will establish my covenant with thee (the Jews); and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done."

Objection 2. — "The quotation from Hebrews shows that the 'immutability of God's counsel' was made known only to the 'heirs of promise.'"

Answer. — We have shown that all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, are heirs of the promise. And the immutability of God's counsel, or the certainty of the fulfilment of these promises, has been made known to all the heirs who have believed in them, is made known to all who do now believe in them, and will be made known to all who ever will believe in them. The believer in these promises looks forward in prospect to the time when they will be fulfilled to all the heirs, and this faith imparts to him a hope, which is as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast. If there are any who do not believe these promises, we have shown that their unbelief cannot make the faith of God without effect. The quotation from Isaiah proves, not only that every knee shall be brought to bow to God, but that every tongue shall swear, saying, Surely, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength. Now, if there are any who will never have righteousness and strength in Jehovah, then, if God compels them to swear that they have, he will compel them to swear to that which is false.

3d. This doctrine is based on the determinate will of God. It is God's will that all men shall be saved. 1 Tim. 2: 1—6, "I exhort, therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."

OBJECTION 1.—"The word will here expresses only God's willingness to have all men saved, and not his determination that they shall be."

ANSWER. — 1. The text does not say that "God is willing to have all men saved," but "God WILL HAVE all men to be saved." 2. That the word will here expresses a will of purpose or determination, is evident from its Scripture usage. In Matt. 8 : 3, Jesus says to the leper, "I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed." John 5 : 21, "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John 6 : 37, "And him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Rom. 9 : 18, "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." Eph. 1 : 9, 10, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself." Eph. 1 : 11, "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." See also John 6 : 38—40.

OBJECTION 2. — "Although God may will the salvation of all men, yet his will may be defeated, as it was in the case of the Jews; of whom it was said, Matt. 23 : 37, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

ANSWER. — 1. To say "I would," and to say "I will," are two very different things. The former expresses only a willingness, but the latter a positive will of determination. 2. The passage in Matthew only expresses the willingness of Christ; but the passage in 1 Timothy expresses the will of God. Christ came down from heaven "not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him," John 6 : 38. Christ was willing that the cup of suffering might pass from him; nevertheless, he says "not my will, but thine, O God, be done." Matt. 26 : 39. 3. That the will of God, respecting the final destiny of his creatures, can never change, nor be defeated, may be seen from the following scriptures. James 1 : 17, "With God is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Job 23 : 13, "He is in one mind, and none can turn him." Prov. 19 : 21, "There are many devices in a man's heart: nevertheless, the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand." Dan. 4 : 35, "He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand." Eph. 1 : 11, "He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."

4th. This doctrine is based on what the Scriptures teach respecting the pleasure of God. God created all for his pleasure. Rev. 4 : 11, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power : for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Eph. 1 : 9, 10, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself : that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him."

Objection 1. — "This gathering in Christ, is spoken only of believers ; and no reference is had to any others than believers in him."

Answer. — Believers are already gathered in Christ, and as the text speaks of this gathering as something which is in process of accomplishment, but will not be consummated until "in the dispensation of the fulness of times," and as none only unbelievers have any need of being gathered in Christ, and as the phrase "things in heaven, and things on earth" was used to signify all created intelligences, hence, the text teaches the final ingathering of all lapsed intelligences in Christ ; and reference is had in the text not simply to those who were, or would become, believers in this world, but to all mankind, whether believers or unbelievers.

Objection 2. — "It may be God's pleasure to gather all men in Christ ; and yet his pleasure may not be accomplished."

Answer. — God's pleasure will be accomplished. Isa. 46 : 10, "I will do all my pleasure." Isa. 55 : 10, 11, "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow, from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater ; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth : it shall not return unto me void ; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." In Isa. 53 : 10, we are told that "the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in the hands of Christ."

5th. This doctrine is based on the unalterable purpose of God. From the quotation which we have just made, we learn, that "God has purposed in himself to gather together in one all mankind in Christ."

OBJECTION. — "Although God may have purposed to do this, yet that purpose may fail."

ANSWER. — The purpose of God can never fail. Isa. 14 : 24. "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely, as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed SO SHALL IT STAND." Verse 27, "The Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?" Isa. 46 : 9, 10, "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." See also verse 11, "I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it." We have seen that in Eph. 1 : 11, Paul speaks of "the purpose of him who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will."

6th. We argue the truth of Universalism from the testimony of all GOD'S HOLY PROPHETS. All the holy prophets have testified to the truth of this doctrine. Acts 3 : 20, 21, "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." We have seen that Moses taught the destruction of all evil, when he represented sin under the figure of a serpent, whose head the seed of the woman was to bruise. David says, Ps. 22 : 27, "All the ends of the world shall remember, and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him. For the kingdom is the Lord's; and he is the governor among the nations." Again, Ps. 86 : 9, "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name." He also said of Christ, Ps. 72 : 11, 17, "All kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him . . . . men shall be blessed in him, all nations shall call him blessed." Isaiah says, Isa. 2 : 2, "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills: and all nations shall flow into it." By mountain is meant the covenant of the Gospel. Again, speaking of Christ in the name of God, he says, Isa. 49 : 6, "I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation to the ends of the earth." Again, he says, Isa. 25 : 6—8

"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wine on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Objection 1. — "This has reference to the coming of the Messiah, and the establishment of the Gospel dispensation; consequently it must not be applied to anything yet future."

Answer. — 1. Allowing it to have reference to the establishment of the Gospel dispensation, there is no way of avoiding the conclusion, that it predicts the final results of the Messiah's reign. Before his reign closes, then, the veil of error is to be removed from the minds of men, death is to be swallowed up in victory, and tears are to be wiped from off all faces. 2. Paul quotes this language in 1 Cor. 15th chapter, and applies it to the resurrection; so that, if the objector is right, of course Paul must have been mistaken.

Objection 2. — "In verse 10 of this very chapter we are told that 'Moab shall be trodden down, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill.' So that it appears there is to be some destruction, as well as salvation."

Answer. — Whatever may be meant by Moab here, it is manifest that he was to be trodden down before the reign of Christ should come to a close. During Christ's reign he administers rewards and punishments; and when his reign closes, the dispensation of rewards and punishments ceases. Besides, in Jer. 48 we have a particular account of the punishment which was to come upon Moab; and a prediction of its final termination. Verse 47 reads as follows: "Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the Lord."

Jeremiah speaks of a new covenant which God would make with the house of Israel. Jer. 31: 31—34. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt (which my covenant they break, although I was an husband to them, said the Lord); but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." This language proves the eventual salvation of the whole Jewish race. But before this can take place, the Gentiles must first be saved; for Paul, in Rom. 11: 25, 26, says that the Jews are not to come in "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved."

Daniel said of Christ, Dan. 7: 14, "There was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him." He also taught that Christ "should make reconciliation for iniquity, finish the transgression, make an end of sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness." Dan. 9: 24.

Hosea foretold the destruction of death and hell, and the redemption of mankind from their power. Hosea 13: 14, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol, hell); I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave (sheol), I will be thy destruction." Paul quotes this language in 1 Cor. 15, and applies it to the general resurrection of the dead. So that, instead of mankind being raised from the dead to be sent into hell, hell is to be destroyed at the resurrection.

7th. We argue the truth of this doctrine from the testimony of Christ and his Apostles. Jesus said he came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19: 10. Not that which was in danger of being lost, but that which was lost. All mankind were lost. Jesus, therefore, came to save all mankind. He came to do or accomplish the will of God. John 6: 38, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." We have seen that God's will is that all men should be saved. The testimony of Jesus on this point is, John 6: 39, "And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." This is not only the will of God respecting all who are given to Christ, but it is also his will that those who believe in the gospel should have everlasting life here in this world. John 6: 40

"And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life." Compare this with John 5 : 24 and 17 : 3. Not any who are given to Christ then will eventually be lost. Well, how many are given to Christ? Ps. 2 : 7, 8, "I will declare the decree : the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son ; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Objection. — "In verse 9 of this psalm it is said, 'Thou shalt break them (the heathen) with a rod of iron ; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.' This is inconsistent with the idea of their being saved."

Answer. — We have already shown that Christ, during his reign as the Messiah, will administer rewards and punishments; and that when his reign ceases the dispensation of rewards and punishments will cease also, as he is not to deliver up his kingdom until he has put down all rule, and all authority and power; — until he has reconciled all intelligences to God, and brought them into willing subjection to him. However severe may be the punishment which he will inflict upon the heathen, they are eventually to become his inheritance, as God has given them to him. And we have seen that the will of God is, that of all which he has given Christ, he should lose nothing.

The heathen are given to Christ for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Jesus certifies to the same truth. John 3 : 35, "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." John 16 : 15, "All that the Father hath are mine." Paul says of Christ, Heb. 1 : 2, "Whom he hath appointed heir of all things." Well, has Christ the will and the power to accomplish the object of his mission? Matt. 28 : 18, "All power is given me in heaven, and in earth." John 17 : 2. "Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." John 6 : 37, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me : and him that cometh to me I will in nowise cast out." John 12 : 32, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Jesus taught that the subjects of the resurrection would be equal unto the angels, be placed beyond the reach of death, and be the children of God. Luke 20 : 35, 36, "They which shall be ac counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Objection. — "The word worthy in this text, implies that some will not be accounted worthy to obtain a resurrection from the dead."

Answer. — 1. This objection has as much force against the doctrine of endless misery as against Universalism. For if any portion of the human race will not experience a resurrection from the state of death, endless misery for them is of course out of the question. And the text proves conclusively that all who will be raised from the dead shall be holy and happy as the angels of God. 2. The word worthy must not be understood in such a sense as to make this text contradict other portions of the divine testimony. But if we understand it to limit the number of those who shall be raised from the dead, it will contradict the testimony of Jesus himself, of Paul, and all the other scripture writers who have treated upon the resurrection. There is no doctrine more pointedly taught in the Bible than that there shall be a resurrection of all mankind from the dead. In immediate connection with this text, Jesus said, "All live unto God" (see verse 38); and he declared that he would "Draw all men unto him." Paul taught the resurrection of the dead, "both of the just and unjust" (see Acts 24: 15); and in 1 Cor. 15: 22, he says: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 3. The parallel passages in Matthew and Mark say nothing about any worthiness. In Matt. 22: 30, we read, "For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven;" and in Mark 12: 25, "For when they shall rise from the dead they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven." 4. The language of the text was addressed to the Sadducees, and in the hearing of the Pharisees. The Sadducees did not believe in any resurrection, nor future life. The Pharisees believed in a kind of resurrection, which was nothing more, however, than a mere transmigration. Some suppose they limited the resurrection to those whom they denominated "the just;" whereas others think they believed in a general resurrection of all mankind. In either case the testimony of Jesus in the text under consideration was pointedly against the opinions of both the Sadducees and Pharisees. In opposition to the doctrine of the Sadducees, he taught that there should be a resurrection of the dead, and a future life. In opposition to the doctrine of the Pharisees, if they held to a limited resurrection consisting in a transmigration of the soul into other bodies, he taught that the subjects of the resurrection would be equal to the angels of God. And in opposition to their doctrine, if they held to a general resurrection which would be a happy one to some, and a miserable one to others, he taught that all who should be raised from the dead would be holy and happy. 5. The question of the Sadducees, to which the language of the text is an answer, did not relate to the number who should be raised from the dead, but to the condition of those who would experience such resurrection; and our Lord here teaches the general truth, that all the subjects of the resurrection will be introduced into a state of existence, where they will be holy and happy, and where they will be beyond the reach of death. Hence, those who admit the doctrine of a resurrection of all the dead, must allow that this text is a strong proof of the doctrine of universal holiness and happiness. 6. The word worthy may refer to the different degrees of value which is to be attached to the different orders of God's animal creation. As in Matt. 6: 26, "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" And in Luke 12: 6, 7, "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not, therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows." Such were the opinions, and such the habit of thinking of the Sadducees, that if they were brought to admit the resurrection of mankind from the dead, they might suppose that the resurrection of beasts, birds, insects, &c., and indeed all animal creatures, was equally as probable. Hence Jesus might have used the word worthy to signify value, and to limit the resurrection to that part of God's animal creation which he esteemed of sufficient value to be raised from the dead, viz., all mankind. At all events, it will not do to understand the text as limiting the number of the human race who shall be raised from the state of death, for reasons which have already been specified.

Jesus pointedly condemned the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees. Matt. 16: 6, "Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." The Sadducees, as we have seen, believed death to be an eternal sleep; and the Pharisees were extremely partial and exclusive in their views of God's character, government, dealings and purposes, towards the children of men. In other words, they were Partialists. Jesus, therefore, has left upon record a pointed condemnation of the principles and practices of Partialists.

Peter was taught, in the vision of the vessel like a sheet knit at the four corners, that all men came down from heaven (i. e., were created by one God who is in heaven); and will all be drawn up again into heaven; and to call no man common or unclean. See Acts 10: 10—15, 11: 5—10.

John says, 1 John 4: 14, "We have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." And he says the Samaritans said of him, John 4: 42, "We have seen him ourselves, and know this indeed to be the Christ, the Saviour of the world." And in 1 John 2: 2, he says of Christ, "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." He speaks of the record which God has given of his Son, and says, 1 John 5: 11, "And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son." In verse 10, he says, that those who believe not this record make God (or treat God as) a liar. Now, if there are any upon whom God has not purposed to bestow eternal life, then if they believe he has not, of course they believe the truth. How then do they treat God as a liar? John teaches the destruction of all the works of the devil. 1 John 3: 8, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." He taught that all God's intelligent creatures will finally render spiritual worship to him. Rev. 5: 13, "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. 15: 4, "Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee." He also taught that a period will finally arrive when all tears shall be wiped away; when death shall no longer hold dominion over man. and when all sorrow, and crying, and pain, shall be done away forever. Rev. 21 : 4, "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain : for the former things are done away."

We come now to the testimony of the apostle Paul, and we will arrange his testimony under distinct heads.

1. Paul taught that the salvation of the Gospel is God's free gift to man, and that no man can merit it by any act or volition of his whatsoever. Eph. 2 : 8, 9, "For by grace are ye saved through faith ; and that not of yourselves ; it is the gift of God : not of works, lest any man should boast." 2 Tim. 1 : 9, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."

2. He teaches that the free gift of life is as extensive as the judgment to condemnation. Rom. 5 : 18, "Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation ; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." This gift is eternal life. Rom. 6 : 23, "For the wages of sin is death ; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Objection. — "This free gift is offered to all, but this does not prove that all will accept of it and be saved."

Answer. — There is a great difference between offering to give a thing, and actually giving it. Nothing is said in the text about offering to give eternal life ; but on the contrary, it is said, "The free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." This free gift is to result in justification of life to all to whom it came. But how can this be, unless it is eventually accepted by all ?

3. Paul draws the parallel lines between the extent of sin and disobedience on the one hand, and the extent of righteousness and obedience on the other ; and affirms that just as far as the one had extended, even just as far should the other. Rom. 5 : 19, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners ; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Parkhurst says on this text, "The word many in this verse, signifies the many ; that is, the mass, the multitude ; the whole bulk of mankind." Dr. Macknight says, "For as the word many in the first part of the verse, does not mean some part of mankind only, but all mankind, from first to last, who without exception are constituted sinners; so the many, in the latter part of the verse, who are said to be constituted righteous through the obedience of Christ, must mean all mankind, from the beginning to the end of the world, without exception." No man is a sinner until he sins personally; so no man will be counted righteous until he personally practises righteousness. Hence if, as Paul avers, righteousness will extend as far as sin has extended, then all who ever have or ever will practise sin, must eventually practise righteousness. And when all men practise righteousness, what will prevent their being saved?

4. Paul draws the parallel lines between the extent of sin on the one hand, and of grace on the other; and affirms that grace shall extend as far as sin, and even abound over it; so that at last all shall end in righteousness and eternal life. Rom. 5: 20, 21, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." The same number who have experienced death, as the consequence of their own personal sins, are to experience eternal life, as the consequence of their own personal righteousness; which righteousness is produced through the instrumentality of Jesus Christ. And grace is to abound over sin, in that the eternal life which is the consequence of righteousness far exceeds the death which is the consequence of sin.

5. He teaches that the whole creation was made subject to vanity, and that the same creation shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and be made to participate in the liberty of the children of God. Rom. 8: 20, 21, "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." The same word which is here rendered creature is in verse 22 rendered creation. Dr. Macknight and other good critics say that the word here rendered creature and creation signifies "every human creature; ALL MANKIND." Rev. Thomas White translates the passage thus: "For THE CREATION was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who subjected it; in hope that THE CREATION ITSELF also shall be deliv ered," &c.

6. He taught the final salvation of the whole mass of both Jew and Gentiles. Rom. 11: 25—32, "For I would not, brethren (Gentiles), that ye should be ignorant of this mystery (lest ye should be wise in your own conceits), that blindness in part [not total blindness] is happened to Israel, until [here is a limitation of it] the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel, they (the Jews) are enemies for your (the Gentiles) sakes; but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance [that is, God never repents of his gifts or calling]. For as ye (the Gentiles) in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their (the Jews) unbelief; even so have these (the Jews) also now not believed, that through your mercy they may also obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all" This last verse teaches that the mercy of God towards the Jews will extend as far as their unbelief has extended. We know not how any man of ordinary understanding can read the 11th chapter of Romans and not see that the evident design of the apostle was to teach the eventual salvation of both Jews and Gentiles.

7. He taught that Christ is Lord both of the dead and living; and that, whether living or dead, we are the Lord's. Rom. 14: 7—9, "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living." The dead and living comprise all mankind, consequently Christ is Lord of all.

8. He teaches that Christ gave himself a ransom for all; that he died for all; that he tasted death for every man; that he came to save sinners; that he died for us when we were sinners, and that he died for the ungodly. 1 Tim. 2: 6, "Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." Heb. 2: 9, "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." 1 Tim. 1: 15, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." 2 Cor. 5: 14, "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." Rom. 5: 8, "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5: 6, "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."

9. Paul not only taught that God loves his creatures, even when dead in trespasses and sins, Eph. 2: 4, 5, but that there is no power in heaven above, nor on the earth beneath, nor in the universe of Jehovah, which can separate us from his love. Rom. 8: 38, 39, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to COME, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

OBJECTION. — "Paul was speaking of God's love to Christians, and not of his love to all mankind."

ANSWER. — He was speaking not only of God's love to Christians, but of his love to mankind in general, as is evident from Eph. 2: 4, 5, "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins." If God loves mankind even when dead in sins, will he ever cease to love them? If he is unchangeable, surely not.

If, then, there is any truth in the declaration of the apostle, which we have quoted from Rom. 8: 38, 39, nothing can separate God's creatures from his love. Life cannot do it. If we should live through ceaseless ages, we cannot outlive the love of God. Death cannot. No; death cannot place us beyond the reach of God's love. Angels cannot. No; angels, whether fallen or otherwise, cannot do it. Principalities and powers cannot. No; there is no power in the universe that can do it. Things present or to come cannot do it. No; there is no circumstance of time, place or condition, now nor never will be, that can do it. Height nor depth cannot do it. No; we may speed our way upward with the velocity of lightning, and continue to ascend through the regions of space, till millions of ages have rolled around, but we could never reach the place where we should not be surrounded with the tokens and evidences of God's impartial and undying love. Or we may descend with the same velocity, and for the same length of time, into the regions beneath, but we could not go where "universal love" would not smile around and encircle us in its warm embrace. No creature can separate us from the love of God. No; we may imagine as many devils as we please, but no devil ever did or ever will exist which will possess the power to rob God of his children, or separate them from his love.

10. Paul taught the limitation, remedial design, efficacious nature, and benevolent object of all the divine chastisements. Heb. 12: 5—11, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons, for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh who corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now, no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby."

11. He teaches that the grace of God brings salvation to all men. Titus 2: 11, "For the grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men." Adam Clarke says on this text, "It cannot be said, except in a very refined and spiritual sense, that this Gospel had then appeared to all men; but it may be well said that it bringeth salvation to all men; this is its design, and it was to taste death for every man that its Author came into the world." He adds, "As the light and heat of the sun are denied to no nation nor individual, so the grace of the Lord Jesus; this also shines out upon all; and God designs that all mankind shall be as equally benefited by it in reference to their souls, as they are in respect to their bodies by the sun that shines in the firmament of heaven." In the margin

12. He taught that there is a moral power in goodness, which renders it sufficient to overcome and subdue all evil. Rom. 12: 21, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." This shows us that evil is limited and bounded by goodness: and that it can be subdued and overcome. Who can doubt that God, who is infinitely good, will overcome it and bring it to a final end?

13. Paul expressly declares that God is the Saviour of all men; and states the fact of his trusting in him as such, as the reason why he suffered reproach. 1 Tim. 4: 10, "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe." By believing that God is the Saviour of all men, the believer enjoys a special salvation which the unbeliever knows not of. But God could not be said to be the special Saviour of the believer, unless he is the Saviour of all mankind. For, if God is the Saviour of none but believers, there would be nothing special about their salvation; that is, nothing by which it would be distinguished from the salvation of anybody else, as nobody else would be saved.

14. He teaches the destruction of all enemies to God and man; even the last enemy, death. 1 Cor. 15: 26, "The last enemy shall be destroyed, death." 2 Tim. 1: 10, "Who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light." Death is here declared to be the last enemy. If death is the last enemy, certainly there can be no enemy after death. And if the last enemy, death, is eventually destroyed, then man will have no enemy. And if the time ever arrives when man will have no enemy, what will prevent his being holy and happy?

15. He not only teaches the destruction of death, but he also teaches the destruction of that which has the power of death; and the final deliverance of those who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Heb. 2: 14, 15, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." What has the power of death? James 1: 15,

"Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Sin, then, according to the apostle, is eventually to be destroyed and banished from the universe of God.

16. He also taught the destruction of the grave or hell; and that mankind will gain a complete victory over the powers of death and the grave, and that death shall be robbed of its sting and the grave of its power. 1 Cor. 15: 55, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave (hades), where is thy victory?" These are questions which involve their own answers, and the language implies that both death and hades are to be destroyed.

17. He taught the final ingathering, or reheading, of all men in Christ. Eph. 1: 9, 10, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him."

18. He taught that at last every knee would be brought to bow at the name of Jesus, and every tongue to confess him Lord. Phil. 2: 9—11, "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him (Christ), and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father."

Objection. — "Although all will at last bow the knee to Christ, and confess him Lord, yet on the part of some it will be a forced submission; and, therefore, the text does not prove universal salvation."

Answer. — All this is mere assertion. Nothing is said in the text about one class of men bowing the knee in any different manner from any other class. And, for aught the text says to the contrary, it will not only be done by all, but by all alike, in the same manner, in the same spirit, and with the same sincerity. Indeed, nothing but a willing subjection of mankind to Christ, and an honest and sincere confession of him as Lord, would be to the glory of God, which Paul says the bowing and confession spoken of in the text shall be. Besides, in 1 Cor. 12: 3, we are told that "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost;" and in Rom. 10: 10 "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." If all men, therefore, finally confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, of course all will be saved. If the reader will consult Col. 1 : 19, 20, he will see that all mankind are not only to bow the knee to Christ, and to confess him Lord, but they are to be reconciled to God. This proves that their subjection, so far from being forced, will be voluntary; and that the confession spoken of will be from the heart.

19. He taught the final reconciliation of all intelligences to God. 2 Cor. 5 : 19, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Col. 1 : 19, 20, "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell : and having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." Professor Stuart says, "Things in heaven, earth, and under the earth, is a common periphrasis of the Hebrew and New Testament writers for the universe." All intelligent creatures, then, in the universe are finally to become reconciled to God. Then, of course, there will be nothing in the way of their salvation.

20. Paul draws the parallel lines between the extent of natural and moral death on the one hand, and of immortal and spiritual life on the other; and shows that all who had or would experience the former, should eventually experience the latter. 1 Cor. 15 : 22, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Dr. Belsham says on this text, "The apostle's language is so clear and full with respect to the final happiness of those who are thus raised, and that their resurrection to life will be ultimately a blessing, that the generality of Christians have supposed that he is here treating of the resurrection of the virtuous only. But that is not the fact. He evidently speaks of the restoration of the whole human race. All who die by Adam shall be raised by Christ; otherwise the apostle's assertion would be untrue. The case then would have been this : as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall a select number, a small proportion, be made alive. But this is not the apostle's doctrine. His expressions are equally universal in each clause. ALL die in Adam. The same ALL, without any exception, without any restriction, shall by Christ be restored to life, and ultimately to holiness and everlasting happiness."

OBJECTION. — "The resurrection spoken of here is a resurrection of the body merely. It is, therefore, only a physical change, and does not imply that those who will be thus raised will be saved."

ANSWER. — How do men die in Adam? Adam here signifies earthy man. Every man is an earthy man. Well, as in the earthy man all die, even so in Christ (the heavenly man) shall all be made alive. Now, how do men die in the earthy man? They die both physically and morally. Rom. 5 : 12, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Natural death is the result of a mortal constitution, which every man has. Moral death is the result of sin, which every man commits. Well, as in the earthy man all die physically and morally, even so in Christ shall all be made alive physically and morally. Besides, the apostle shows that all who are raised from the state of death will be raised from "corruption to incorruption," from "dishonor to glory." This certainly shows that the change to be effected by the resurrection is something more than a mere physical change. Nor does the apostle give the least hint or intimation, in the whole chapter, that any who are raised will be miserable thereafter; but, on the contrary, he speaks of it as a change to be effected upon all mankind, and upon all alike.

21. He teaches that all who have borne or shall bear the image of the earthy man, shall also bear the image of the heavenly man 1 Cor. 15 : 49, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

22. He teaches the resurrection of all the dead from corruption to incorruption, from weakness to power, from natural to spiritual, from dishonor to glory; and the change of both the living and the dead from mortal to immortality. 1 Cor. 15 : 42—44, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15 : 51—54, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump (for the trumpet shall sound); and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written [see Isa. 25 : 6—8], Death is swallowed up in victory." It is often asserted that there is no change after death; but, if there is any truth in the declaration of the apostle in these texts, the most important change which will ever be experienced by man will take place after death. Man, therefore, in the resurrection world, will be a very different being from what he is here. All reasoning, then, upon the subject of what man will be there from what he is here, is entirely out of the question.

23. He taught that out of God, as the great author, origin, source, and fountain, all things have proceeded; and that into him, as the great centre to which they are tending, shall all things return. Rom. 11 : 36, "For of him (God), and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen." And who cannot respond, Amen?

24. Finally, he teaches the subjection of all intelligent beings to Christ; and, finally, their and Christ's subjection to God; that God may become the all and in all of his creatures. 1 Cor. 15 : 24—28, "Then cometh the end, when he (Christ) shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that did put all things under him, that God may be all in all." This testimony very plainly asserts the following facts. 1. All things, that is, all beings, are to be brought into subjection to Christ. This work is now going on. It is a progressive work, but will eventually be consummated. In Heb. 2 : 8, 9, Paul says, "Thou (God) hast put all things in subjection under his (Christ's) feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.' 2. There is but one exception to this universal subjection, and that exception is God. 3. Christ is to put down all rule, and all authority and power. Of course, when this is accomplished, the devil will have no rule, nor authority, nor power. 4. Christ and all mankind are finally to become subject to the power, the authority and the government of God. As we have shown that mankind are not only to become subject to God, but are to be reconciled to him, of course there will then be no rebels against God in the universe; either in will, wish, desire, or action; but the spirit of God, who is love, will pervade the hearts and minds of all his creatures, and he himself become all in all. Then God's will and purpose respecting the final destiny of his creatures will be accomplished. His promises will be fulfilled, his oath performed, and his counsel established. Christ will see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied; and the highest and holiest wishes and desires of the hearts of all God's rational creatures will be gratified.

8th. We argue the truth of Universalism from the negative testimony of the BIBLE. The Bible not only teaches the doctrine of universal salvation in positive terms, but it gives the lie direct to the opposite doctrine.

1. It teaches that the anger of God, so far from enduring endlessly, endures but for a moment. Ps. 30: 5, "For his anger endureth but a moment." Isa. 54: 8, "In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

2. It expressly declares that God will not be always wroth, and that he will not retain his anger endlessly. Isa. 57: 16, "For I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth." The reason assigned is, "For the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." Ps. 103: 8, 9, "The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy; he will not always chide, neither will he retain his anger forever." Mic. 7: 18, "He retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy." Ps. 89: 30—32, "If his (David's) children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes; but my loving kindness will I not utterly take from them nor suffer my faithfulness to fail." Lam. 3: 31—33, "For the Lord will not cast off forever; but though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his tender mercies."

9th. We argue the truth of this doctrine from inferences, which are plainly deducible from several facts, which are explicitly stated in the BIBLE. We infer the truth of this doctrine,

1. From the fact that God is the Creator of all men. Acts 17 : 26, "He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Rev. 4 : 11, "Thou (God) hast created all things." If God is the Creator of all men, he created them for wise and benevolent purposes. He has conferred on us an unasked existence, and he will see to it that that existence does not result in a curse.

2. God is the Father of all men. In Num. 16 : 22 and Heb. 12 : 9, he is called the "God and Father of the spirits of all flesh." In Matt. 6 : 9, we are instructed to call him "our Father." In Mal. 2 : 6, the prophet asks, "Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us?" In Matt. 23 : 9, Jesus says that, "one is our Father, which is in heaven." In Acts 17 : 22, Paul calls the idolatrous heathen "the offspring of God." And in Eph. 4 : 6, he says, "There is one God and Father of all." A good father would never make the existence of his children a curse. If, therefore, God is the Father of all mankind, he will never make any portion of them miserable, any further than is for their ultimate good.

3. God is good, and his goodness is universal. Ps. 145 : 9, "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." Ps. 119 : 68, "Thou art good, and doest good." If God is good to all now, he always will be; and, hence, he will do good to all now, and in all coming time. Consequently, he will never inflict any positive evil upon any.

4. God is wise. Ps. 104 : 24, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom thou hast made them all." Rom. 16 : 27, "To God only wise be glory." If God is wise, he can devise the best possible plans; but to devise a system of moral government, which would result in the endless sin, rebellion and misery, of the subjects of that government, would not be the best possible plan; therefore, God has devised no such plan.

5. God is holy. Lev. 19 : 2, "For I the Lord your God am holy." Rev. 4 : 8, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." If God is holy he must be opposed to evil any further than that evil can be made subservient to the production of good. But endless evil could result in no good; therefore, God will not permit endless evil to exist.

6. God is just. Isa. 45 : 21, "A just God, and a Saviour." If God is just, he will punish and reward all moral agents according to their works. But endless punishment would not be according to the works of men. Therefore, God will not inflict such punishment upon any.

7. God is merciful. Ps. 62: 12, "Unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou renderest to every man according to his works." Ps. 107: 1, "His mercy endureth forever." In the 136th Psalm David asserts no less than twenty-six times that the mercy of God "endureth forever." The same thing is asserted more than fifty times in the Bible. For God to inflict endless pain upon any of his creatures, would leave no room for the exercise of mercy. Therefore, as he is merciful, and always will remain so, he will inflict no such pain on any.

8. God is omnipotent. Rev. 19: 6, "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth." If God is omnipotent, there is no power in the universe which can be arrayed against him which he cannot overcome. His plans and purposes, therefore, cannot be defeated. And as all his plans are wise, benevolent and good, hence good and only good must be the final result to all his creatures.

9. God is love. 1 John 4: 8, "God is love." Love prompts its possessor to do all that lays in his power to promote the good of the objects of love. God has an abundance of power to promote the good of his creatures, for he is omnipotent. He has the disposition to do so, for he is love. Hence, good to all must be the final result.

10. God is impartial. Ps. 145: 9, "The Lord is good to all." In James 3: 17, it is said of the wisdom which cometh down from above, that it is "without partiality." If God is impartial, he has never purposed the endless happiness of some of his children, and the endless unhappiness of the rest.

11. God is unchangeable. Mal. 3: 6, "I am the Lord, I change not." James 1: 17, "With whom (God) is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." If God is unchangeable, he will endlessly remain what he has been in all time past, and is now. And as he always has, and does now, seek the good of his creatures, therefore he always will.

12. We infer this doctrine from the representation which is given of the Gospel by the inspired writers. The term Gospel signifies good news. The angels who announced the birth of the Saviour, said, Luke 2: 10, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people." The Gospel is called "the everlasting gospel," Rev. 14: 6. The "gospel of the grace of God," Acts 20: 24. The "gospel of peace," Eph. 6: 15. The "gospel of God," Rom. 1: 1. The "glorious gospel," 1 Tim. 1: 11. And, the "gospel of our salvation," Eph. 1: 13. It is called the "new covenant," Heb. 8: 8. Said to be "better than the old," Heb. 8: 6. To be founded on better promises, Heb. 8: 6. Said to be "the ministration, not of condemnation and death, but of life and peace," 2 Cor. 3: 6—11. If this is a correct representation of the Gospel, certainly such a glorious system could not reveal nor contain the doctrine of unmerciful wrath and never-ending cruelty.

13. From the character, conduct and teachings, of Jesus Christ. He was the great founder of the Christian religion. He was benevolent, and even mindful of the physical wants of man, Mark 8: 1—9. He was tender-hearted and sympathizing. He wept at the grave of Lazarus, John 11: 35; raised the widow's son, Luke 7. 12—15; healed the physical maladies of men, Matt. 12: 10—13; and mourned and wept over Jerusalem, Matt. 23: 37—39, and Luke 19: 41. He was mild, forgiving and forbearing — to Peter, who denied him, Luke 22: 61, 62; to Thomas, who would not believe him, John 20: 24—29; to the woman taken in adultery, John 8: 3—11. He taught that we must love and forgive our enemies, Matt. 5: 44, and 6: 14, 15. He taught that we must forgive, not seven times only, but seventy times seven, Matt. 18: 21, 22. He prayed for his enemies and murderers, Luke 23: 34. And, at last, he freely offered up his life as a sacrifice on the altar of humanity. The whole conduct, and character, and disposition, and teachings, of Jesus was in accordance with the spirit of universal love and benevolence. He was actuated by none of the spirit of revenge, wrath or cruelty. How, then, can it be supposed that he believed and taught the cruel and unmerciful doctrine of endless hell torments?

14. From the influence which the Gospel exerts upon the character, conduct and feelings, of its recipients. What a mighty and an astonishing change it wrought in Paul! His partial and exclusive sentiments and feelings were exchanged for the utmost liberality of opinion and feeling. The Gospel changed his enmity to love, his bigotry to charity, and his Partialism to Universalism. It wrought the same happy change in all who received its truths into good and honest hearts. A belief in the Partialist God, and in the Partialist doctrine, could never have produced such effects. Hence, Partialism is not the doctrine of the Gospel.

15. From the nature of God's law and its requirements of man. It is the great law of love. It requires that we love God with all our soul, might, mind and strength, and our fellow-men as ourselves, Matt. 22 : 36—40. But how can we love God in the manner required, unless he is a lovely being? And how can he be a lovely being, and at the same time inflict unending pain upon his own helpless and dependent offspring? Again, how can we love our fellow-men as ourselves, if we believe God hates a portion of them? We are bound to imitate God. We are commanded to imitate him as dear children, Eph. 5 : 1. If, therefore, God hates a part of mankind, we are bound to do so likewise. The very fact, then, that we are required to love our fellow-men, universally, proves that God loves all, and will do good to all.

16. From the effects which the Gospel produced on those who believed it. They were saved, Rom. 8 : 24, and 1 Cor. 1 : 18, they were blessed, Gal. 3 : 9 ; they had peace and joy in believing, Rom. 15 : 13 ; they were enabled to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, 1 Peter 1 : 8 ; their joy was full, John 15 : 11 ; and they entered into rest, Heb. 4 : 3. A belief in a partial God and in a partial salvation could not produce such effects Nothing short of a belief in God as the Father, Friend and Saviour, of all mankind, could do it.

17. From what the Scriptures teach respecting faith. It is the substance of things hoped for, Heb. 11 : 1 ; and it works by love, and purifies the heart, Gal. 5 : 6. But no man can hope for endless misery to be true ; and, hence, that doctrine is not the substance of things hoped for. Therefore, a faith in that is not the faith of the Gospel. All hope for the truth of Universalism ; hence, Universalism is the substance of things hoped for, and, therefore, a faith in Universalism is the faith of the Gospel. Again, Partialism, or a faith in the doctrine of endless misery, does not work by love, but by fear ; hence, it is not Gospel faith. But Universalism does work by love, and not by fear ; therefore, to believe in Universalism is to believe the Gospel. Once more ; a belief in Partialism does not purify the heart, but serves rather to harden it and to blunt the finer feelings of human nature ; hence, it is not the true faith.

Universalism does purify the heart and beget a principle there of universal benevolence and philanthropy to man; therefore it is the true faith.

18. From what the Scriptures teach respecting hope. It enables its possessor to purify himself even as God is pure. 1 John 3: 3. It is an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast. Heb. 6: 19 On the purifying nature of this hope the remarks made above on faith will apply equally as well here. They need not, therefore, be repeated. This hope is called "an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." But how could it be so if the thing hoped for depended on the fickleness of man? Man is too frail, and erring, and helpless a being to found such a hope upon. And nothing short of a belief in God as the Saviour of all, and the absolute certainty of the accomplishment of the thing hoped for, could impart a hope to man which would be as an anchor to his soul, both sure and steadfast.

19. From what the Bible teaches respecting the confidence which we ought to repose in God. We are repeatedly commanded to trust in God. To do so, is enjoined upon us as a sacred and imperious duty. Prov. 3: 5, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart." Ps. 62: 8, "Trust in him at all times, ye people; pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us." Ps. 40: 4, "Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust." Prov. 29: 25, "Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." Isa. 26: 4, "Trust ye in the Lord forever." Ps. 9: 10, "They that know thy name will put their trust in thee." Job 13: 15, "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him." In Job 22: 21, we are required to "make ourselves acquainted with God, and be at peace." Jesus enjoins upon us to repose the most unlimited trust in God, and to take no anxious thought for the future. Matt. 6: 25—34. But if God is as he is sometimes represented to be by the believers in endless misery, how could we trust in him? And if that doctrine is true, how could we help being anxious in regard to the future? The fact is, nothing but a belief in the universal paternity of God, and that he is the Friend of all, will enable us to repose that trust in him which he requires at our hands.

20. From what the Scriptures teach respecting prayer. We are commanded to pray for all men, 1 Tim. 2: 1; to pray for our enemies, even for those who despitefully use us, and persecute us, Matt.

5 : 44 to pray in faith ; for we are told that whatsoever is not of faith is sin, Rom. 14 : 23 ; to lift up holy hands and pray without wrath and doubting, 1 Tim. 2 : 8. But how can we pray in faith for the salvation of all men, unless we believe that all will be saved ? And why pray for all men if God has determined that some shall not be saved, or if we believe that all will not be saved ? The fact that we are required to pray for all men, and to do so in faith, nothing doubting, is a strong proof of the doctrine for the truth of which we are contending.

21. Finally, we infer the truth of this doctrine from the fact that it is in accordance with the highest and holiest desires and expectations of all benevolently disposed and good men ; and that the opposite doctrine does violence to the intellectual powers of man, and is repugnant to the better feelings of his nature. Just in proportion as the feelings of mankind become refined and elevated, and as their intellectual powers are cultivated, and light and knowledge increase, just in that proportion will this doctrine spread and prevail.

CHAPTER XXI

OBJECTIONS TO THE DOCTRINE OF ENDLESS MISERY.

1. It makes God the author of an infinite evil. Misery is evil. The idea of misery infinite in duration presupposes the idea of infinite evil. No finite being can be the cause of an infinite evil. God is the only infinite being in the universe. If, therefore, infinite evil does actually exist, its existence must be referred to God. But to suppose God to be the author of an infinite evil, is to suppose that he is infinitely evil himself.

2. It impeaches some of the most glorious attributes of the Deity. If it be said that this evil is something which God did not foresee, wish, will, desire, appoint, permit, intend nor purpose, then his wisdom, foreknowledge and omniscience, are expressly denied. If it be said that he foresaw this evil, but could not prevent it, this impeaches his power, his goodness, justice, mercy and benevolence; because, to all those whom he created, knowing that their existence would be an endless curse, he is neither good, just, merciful nor benevolent. If it be said that this evil is something which he did actually will, wish, desire, purpose and appoint, this not only impeaches his goodness, justice, mercy and benevolence, but it makes him as malignant as malignity itself; — a perfect monster in cruelty, and as much worse than a Caligula or a Nero, or even the fabled god of hell, as he possesses more power than they to do mischief, to inflict pain and misery.

3. It teaches that our present existence is one of extreme hazard so much so, that no rational man could possibly choose to exist under such circumstances. It has been taught by the believers in this doctrine that ninety-nine out of every hundred of the human family would suffer endless misery; and, indeed, if there is any truth in their general theory, this seems to be a necessary conclusion. Every man who is born into the world, therefore, stands ninety-nine chances of being endlessly miserable, to one of being endlessly happy. Now, suppose a narrow bridge erected over a deep chasm or gulf. On the opposite side there is a fine country, a healthy climate, and everything which can be conducive to the happiness of man. On this side we must experience the same toils, deprivations and sufferings, which fall to the lot of man in this life. We are anxious to cross this gulf and better our condition. We approach to the brink of the gulf, and propose crossing the bridge. We are informed that we are at perfect liberty to do so; but says our informant, "before you attempt the passage, I feel in duty bound to inform you, that although thousands have attempted to cross this bridge, yet ninety-nine out of every hundred fail in the attempt, fall from the bridge, and are dashed to pieces in the chasm below." What rational man, under these circumstances, would be willing to attempt the passage? Not one. No — we should choose rather to remain where we were, than to run such an awful hazard. And yet this falls infinitely short of being a parallel case to that of the other. In the one case we only run the risk of our lives. In the other we run the risk of being endlessly miserable, when the chances are as ninety-nine to one against us. What rational man would not rather choose to sleep the quiet sleep of non-existence, than to receive existence on such terms, and run such a desperate chance?

4. If, as is contended by the advocates of this doctrine, man is the procuring cause of this misery, then it makes infinite consequences flow from finite causes, which is altogether unphilosophical.

5. It carries the consequences of men's actions altogether beyond the sphere in which they act; and involves the absurd idea, that we can sow our seed in one field, and reap the harvest in another. Man, by his sins, only injures himself and his fellow-men, "by destroying his own internal peace, and their external happiness." He cannot injure God, nor any being superior to himself. His actions do not affect the inhabitants of the moon, nor of any of the planetary worlds, nor of any in any part of God's universe except those living in this world. Why, then, should it be supposed that the consequences of his actions can extend beyond the present world, to which all of his actions are confined?

6. The doctrine, as it is held by Arminians, makes man the arbiter of his own destiny, and suspends an eternity of weal, or an eternity of woe, upon his own actions. Now, we appeal to every rational man, and ask if this is not too important a trust to be committed to so frail a being as man? Man, in his very best estate, is a frail child of mortality. He is extremely liable to err, and is surrounded with temptations on every hand. He is born into the world entirely ignorant and helpless, and all that he ever knows he is obliged to learn. The very first that he knows of himself, he is as he is, and he cannot help it. The very first sensations he experiences are those of appetite and want. He is very frequently placed (unavoidably by himself) under circumstances which are unfavorable to the development and cultivation of his moral nature. He is not unfrequently corrupted in his very youth by the teachings and examples of his fellow-beings. Now, to suppose that such a being is made the arbiter of his own eternal destiny, by Him who created him, is such a reflection on the wisdom and goodness of God, that we see not how the idea can be harbored for a single moment. Man manifests but little wisdom in the management of his temporal affairs. Can it be supposed then that he would manage his eternal interests any better?

7. It charges God with cruelty. It accuses him of inflicting pain upon his creatures with no good object in view; that is, in reference to those upon whom it is inflicted. It needs no argument to prove that endless punishment can result in no good to the punished. If it be said that this misery is inflicted for the purpose of vindicating God's glory, justice, and his law; then we ask, — Cannot God's glory, justice and law, be vindicated only at the expense of the endless misery of millions and millions of his own children? Who would not rather think that no such being as God exists? The remark of Plutarch will apply here. "I had rather," says he, "that men would say that no such man as Plutarch ever existed, than to have them say, there was one Plutarch who devoured his own children as soon and as fast as they were born into the world."

Suppose you see a father inflicting punishment upon one of his children; he continues to lay on stripe after stripe, until the shrieks and cries of the unfortunate child cause your blood to chill in your very veins. You ask the father why he inflicts such severe punishment. He tells you, to vindicate his own parental authority, and the law which he has established for the regulation of the conduct of his children. You ask again, But have you no other object in view? Do you not intend the good of your child? He tells you, no; his only object is to vindicate his law. Now, suppose that father to have the power to perpetuate the existence of that child through endless duration; and that you ask him if he intends that the punishment which he is inflicting shall ever cease. He answers, no; and informs you that he intends to perpetuate the existence of his child through eternity, and make him a monument of his eternal wrath and displeasure; and all to vindicate his own authority, honor and law. What would you think of the glory, and honor, and authority, and law, of such a parent as this? Why, the voice of insulted humanity would cry out and brand such a father with infamy. And every rational man would say that he was undeserving the name of parent. How, then, can we attribute such a character, and such conduct, to the God of heaven, as to suppose that he will inflict such pain upon his creatures as can never result in any good?

8. It can result in no good to any being or beings in the universe; and is, therefore, not only useless, but infinitely worse than useless.

9. No such penalty was ever annexed to any known law given by God to man.

10. God never threatened any man, nor any set of men, with any such punishment.

11. No such punishment was ever threatened to man, by any prophet, priest or king, mentioned in the Bible.

12. No person mentioned either in the Old or New Testament ever expressed any fears of suffering such misery.

13. No person mentioned in the Bible ever prayed to God to be saved from such misery.

14. It originated among the heathen. Of course it had its origin among those nations that enjoyed no revelation from God; and is, therefore, a mere chimera of the human imagination.

15. It has a direct tendency to call out the very worst passions of human nature; to blunt the finer feelings of the same, and to foster a spirit of pride, arrogance, self-righteousness, pharisaism, exclusiveness, vindictiveness, cruelty, partialism, malice, malignity, revenge and persecution. In proof of this, we have only to appeal to the history of the conduct of those who have believed this doctrine. The Jews of ancient times, if they did not believe this doctrine, at least believed in a partial God; and this made them partial and exclusive in their feelings. Hence they despised and persecuted every other nation on earth. And if they have been despised and persecuted in turn, it has always been by those of the same partial views as themselves. The Jews of our Saviour's time believed the doctrine of endless misery, having learned it from the heathen; and, under the influence of the feelings engendered by it, they persecuted the disciples of Christ from city to city, imbrued their hands in the innocent blood, and crucified the Son of God. Under the influence of this doctrine, and acting upon the belief that the Mahomedans were the enemies of God, and were hated by him, the crusaders waged an exterminating war of many years against them, and millions and millions of lives were destroyed in the contest. Under the influence of the spirit of the same doctrine, Peter the Hermit raised an army of 600,000 men, and marched to Jerusalem to wrest the "holy land" from the grasp of the infidel Turk. And what a righteous retribution awaited them! They left their bones to bleach on the plains of Palestine, and their blood flowed freely to fatten the soil of that country. Under the same influence the Catholics have martyred thousands of innocent victims, and they too have been persecuted from the same cause. Under the influence of the same views men have instituted the inquisition, the wheel, the rack, and the torture. They have tied their fellow-men to the stake, and destroyed them with fagot and flame. They have whipped Baptists, and hung harmless and peaceable Quakers. They have kindled the fires of Smithfield, and plunged the dagger into the hearts of sixty thousand innocent victims in one day. In fine, this doctrine has filled the world with carnage and blood for more than eighteen hundred years; and it is high time that it was banished from the world. A doctrine of such a tendency never proceeded from a God of truth and love.

16. It has driven thousands to despair, madness, suicide, and death. This fact is so notorious that it requires no proof. The newspapers teem with accounts of this kind almost every week.

17. It does violence to the reasoning powers of man, and is abhorrent to the better feelings of his nature.

18. All human observation and experience are directly arrayed against it. God has so guarded the interests of his creatures here, that pain cannot be endured, beyond such a point, without terminating in the death of the sufferer. Can we then suppose that he will ever perpetuate the existence of his creatures only to make them miserable?

19. It teaches that God will raise myriads of human beings from the quiet sleep of death, and the slumbers of the grave, and constitute them immortal, for no other purpose but to make them endlessly miserable. Of course this makes the doctrine of the resurrection a subject of dread and fear, rather than of hope and joy.

20. It teaches that the divine justice is of such a nature that it can never be satisfied; for what is always doing, will, of course, never be done.

21. If, as has been taught by some of the advocates of endless misery, every sin deserves endless punishment, and if endless punishment consists in inflicting all the pain upon the wicked which their natures will be capable of enduring, then this doctrine renders it utterly impossible for God himself to punish any individual for more than one sin. Of course all other sins were committed with perfect impunity. How, then, is God's justice to be vindicated?

22. It teaches that God's law will eternally be violated; and, of course, never fulfilled. Hence, it comes in contact with the testimony of Jesus Christ. Matt. 5: 18.

23. The doctrine, as held by Arminians, teaches that God has been baffled in his design in creating man; and, of course, that there is a power in the universe which is superior to God himself.

24. The same theory teaches that God has been made the subject of pain and misery by his own creatures; and that that misery can never end. Disappointment implies uneasiness; and uneasiness implies pain and misery. If, therefore, God has been disappointed in the grand and glorious object which he had in view in creating man, that disappointment must be a source of unhappiness to him; and if he is to be eternally disappointed, he must be eternally miserable.

25. It teaches that if God was infinitely malignant and cruel, it could not be worse for a large portion of his sentient creatures than it actually will be; while, at the same time, the advocates of this doctrine say that God is infinitely benignant, benevolent and good. A more palpable contradiction in terms cannot well be imagined nor conceived.

26. It is directly calculated to destroy the confidence of man in the Bible as a revelation from God, and is no doubt the principal cause of nine-tenths of the infidelity which prevails in our world.

27. It has a direct tendency to bar the exercise of that trust and confidence which we ought to repose in God, and which is so necessary to our well-being and happiness in life.

28. It has its origin in hatred. If all mankind had loved each other as they love themselves, no one would ever have dreamed that any man was in danger of suffering endless misery. Ask the believer in this doctrine if he believes his parents will suffer such misery, and he will tell you, no. Ask if he believes his brothers, his sisters, his wife, his children, or his friends, will suffer such misery, and he will answer, no. Even if any of these have died without making any profession of religion, and even without any hope for themselves, still he will express at least a faint hope that they will not be made endlessly miserable. But why all this? Ah, he loves his parents, brothers, sisters, wife, children, and friends, and is willing that they should go to heaven and be happy. But you ask him if he believes that that man who has greatly injured him will suffer such misery, and his answer will be, "O yes; hell was made for just such characters as he." This shows that the doctrine originated in hatred; and that "hell is built on spite." We ought to strongly suspect and distrust a doctrine which originates from such a source.

29. It gives to man the tremendous power of fixing the destiny of his fellow-man, either for weal or woe, through the ceaseless ages of eternity. What a chance for the exercise of malice and revenge does this doctrine give to man! Let us suppose the case of an individual who is a worthy and respectable man; — he has, however, made no profession of religion, nor experienced that miraculous change which is supposed to be necessary in order to entitle him to salvation. He is forty years of age; if he lives to be fifty, he will experience this change and be saved. An individual, of the very worst character, imbibes a hatred toward this man, and, instigated by the spirit of revenge, murders him. The murderer is arrested, tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be hung. While confined in prison, awaiting the day of execution, he is visited by the pious clergy. They pray with him, exhort him to repentance, and finally, through their instrumentality, he is truly converted. On the day of execution he is swung upon the gallows, and his happy spirit is wafted to the realms of bliss. While there, he looks over the battlements of heaven, and sees the man whom he murdered on earth writhing in the agonies of hell. Now, let us suppose that this murderer, if he had not committed this crime, would never have repented, but would have died in his sins and went to hell. Is it not plain that, in this case, the act of murder has been the means of sending a man to hell, who would have otherwise went to heaven; and of sending another to heaven, who otherwise would have went to hell? What a tremendous power is this to commit to erring man!

30. The doctrine of endless hell torments is built on poetry, parables, metaphors, figures of speech, fancy and imagination. The heated imagination of the ancient poets first conceived the idea of endless torture. And the advocates of the doctrine at the present day, so far as they rely upon the Bible to prove it, appeal to the parables, metaphors and figures, which abound in that book, rather than to any plain, positive or direct testimony.

31. It teaches, that not only millions and millions of human beings, who have lived and died in our world, will be made endlessly miserable, but that millions and millions yet unborn, will, if they exist, become the subjects of the same misery. Now, in reference to those yet unborn, there is but one way to prevent their being endlessly miserable. Proclaim universal celibacy, — cease to propagate the human species, — and of course you will cease to be instrumental in bringing beings into existence to be plunged beneath the liquid fires of hell's sulphurous flames. Benevolence, justice and humanity, lift up their voice and demand that this course be pursued by every rational man. A doctrine, from which such conclusions can be legitimately drawn, cannot possibly be true, but must inevitably be false.

32. It teaches that God has annexed a penalty to his law, which, if inflicted, will produce the very thing which the law was designed to prevent. It will not be disputed that the law was designed to prevent misery and to promote happiness. This design is accomplished in so far as it prevents disobedience and secures obedience. But if, when it is violated, it inflicts endless misery on the transgressor, then the design of the law is completely thwarted by its own penalty. It may be said that, "allowing the penalty to be limited misery, yet, if the penalty is suffered, the design of the law is defeated as well as in the other case." We reply, if the object in inflicting the penalty is to prevent transgression and enforce obedience, then the design of the penalty is in harmony with the design of the law. On this principle we avoid the monstrous absurdity which is evidently involved in the idea that an infinite penalty is annexed to the law.

33. It teaches that God has annexed a penalty to his law, which, if inflicted, will forever prevent a large number of its subjects from complying with its requirements. The law demands obedience. It always did and always will require this of all men. But, if God dooms any portion of mankind to endless spiritual death, then it will be impossible for such ever to obey the law.

34. It teaches that God's law rests and is satisfied with the infliction of its penalty. Now, if this is the nature of God's law, then, as "all have sinned," the law would be just as well satisfied with the endless sin, rebellion and misery, of all mankind, as with their obedience. A most singular law such would be surely.

35. It teaches that God has annexed a penalty to his law, which, if inflicted, would be a greater evil than the transgression of the law. That transgression of the law produces misery we admit. But, then, that misery is finite and limited, it being the effect of a finite and limited cause. Now, if God inflicts endless misery on the transgressor, then it will be seen at once that the remedy is infinitely worse than the disease.

36. It teaches that God's law is directly arrayed against his promises. God has promised to bless all mankind in Christ, the seed of Abraham. Acts 3: 25. This blessing consists in turning men from iniquity and saving them from sin. Acts 3: 26. Now, the doctrine of endless misery teaches that God's law will continue to be violated and trampled under foot, by a large portion of its subjects, throughout all coming time. How, then, can God's promises ever be fulfilled? How absurd to suppose that God has involved himself in a dilemma like this!

37. A doctrine so repugnant to reason, so directly opposed to the dictates of benevolence, humanity and justice, cannot be believed by any well-regulated and well-balanced mind. Hence, the wise and good of all ages, whenever and wherever this doctrine has been known, have rejected it.

CHAPTER XXII

ON THE AUTHORITY OF THE APOSTOLIC AND CHRISTIAN FATHERS.

Those early converts to Christianity, who distinguished themselves in defending and publicly teaching the Christian religion, and who lived before the year 120, and who by possibility might have associated with some of Christ's apostles or evangelists, are called the "Apostolic Fathers." Those who succeeded them, and lived after the year 120, up to the time of the establishment of Popery, are called the "Christian Fathers." In the various controversies, on religious points of doctrine, which have agitated the Christian church, the disputants have been in the habit of appealing to the authority of these fathers. In the course of the controversy between Universalists and Limitarians, the authority of these men has sometimes been appealed to as sufficient to settle the point in dispute. Both parties have appealed to their opinions with great confidence; as if what they believed and taught was a matter of great consequence. Now, it appears to us that more importance has been attached to the question, What did the Apostolic and Christian Fathers think, and how did they believe? than it is really deserving of. A few of our reasons for so thinking will now be given. 1st. We will speak of the Apostolic Fathers. 2d. Of the Christian Fathers.

I. The Apostolic Fathers are Clemens, Romanus, Ignatius, Polycarp, Papias, Barnabas, and Hermas. These are all whose writings have come down to us. That their opinions are deserving of but little weight, is evident from the following facts: 1. There is no proof that either of them ever associated with any of Christ's apostles or evangelists. If they did, one thing is certain, they have not in their writings mentioned one of the historians of Christ. See Dodwell's Diss. on Irenus. 2. It is said that Clemens and Ignatius were acquainted with the apostles; and that Polycarp was the disciple of John; but of this there is no direct proof. Allowing it to be true, however, all this might be, and yet they not learn anything from the apostles respecting the great point in dispute now between Limitarians and Universalists. The circumstances of times then made it necessary that the doctrine that Jesus was the true Messiah, and the Sent of God, should be the prominent and fundamental doctrine taught; and but little was said about anything else. Besides, the writings of Clemens, Ignatius and Polycarp, afford no proof of the doctrine of endless misery. It is thought that they believed in a limited resurrection, and that none except the righteous would be raised from the dead. If so, they held an opinion at variance with that taught by the apostle Paul; and, of course, could not have learned it either from him or from the teachings of Christ. 3. The writings of these men prove that they were "men of but little learning; and, for the most part, of as little judgment; and whoever reads them, expecting to find them either instructive or edifying, will rise from their perusal in disappointment, if not with disgust." The epistle of Clemens is the best of them all, and "contains but one instance of those absurd allegories which abound in the succeeding fathers." The writings of Ignatius "contain some puerile conceits, betray a fondness for the Eastern fables concerning the angelic world, and are filled with earnest injunctions of the most unreserved submission of reason, faith and practice, to the CLERGY; whose authority is often likened, expressly, to that of GOD and JESUS CHRIST." Polycarp's writings evince "a more regular and intelligent mind than most of the ecclesiastical writings of that age. The author is guilty of one exception to his general moderation, when he exhorts his brethren to be 'subject to the elders and deacons, as unto GOD and CHRIST.'" Papias formed "a collection of idle tales and foolish notions, and published them to the world as the authoritative instructions of Christ and his apostles; and succeeding fathers adopted some of its fictions." The epistle of Barnabas "was composed by some Jewish Christian of mean abilities, for the purpose of representing the Mosaic law and other parts of the Old Testament as containing a hidden account of Christ and his religion. The allegorical and mystical interpretations of which the epistle mostly consists present an extraordinary instance of blind stupidity aiming at discoveries." "Understand, children," says he, "these things more fully: that Abraham, who was the first that brought in circumcision, performed it, after having received the mystery of three letters, by which he looked forward in the spirit to Jesus. For the scripture says that Abraham circumcised three hundred and eighteen men of his house. But what then was the mystery that was made known to him? Mark, first, the eighteen; and, next, the three hundred. For the numeral letters of ten and eight are IH. And these denote Jesus. And because the cross was that by which we were to find grace, he, therefore, adds three hundred; the numeral letter of which is T, the figure of the cross. Wherefore, by two letters he signified Jesus, and by the third, his cross. He who has put the ingrafted gift of his doctrine within us, knows that I never taught to any a more CERTAIN TRUTH; but I trust ye are worthy of it." "Such is one of the important discoveries our author communicates." If he never taught a greater truth than this, then everything else he taught was, by his own confession, a lie. Strange as it may seem, the later fathers, even those of undoubted learning, such as Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, &c., appear to have been, by no means, insensible to the charms of their kind of nonsense." "The last, as well as the longest, of the works of the Apostolic Fathers, so called, is that effusion of second childishness, The Shepherd of Hermas. It was written at Rome by a brother of the bishop of that city; but it betrays an ignorant and imbecile mind, in absolute dotage. The author relates pretended visions, and introduces instructions which he received from an angel, who occasionally appeared to him, as he asserts, in the habit of a shepherd. But the conversation he attributes to his celestial visitants is more insipid than we commonly hear from the weakest of men." See Ancient History of Universalism, Chap. I.

II. Of the Christian Fathers, the most distinguished are the following: Justin Martyr, Titian, Hegesippus, Irenæus, Athanagorus, Theophilus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, Origen, Demetrius, Alexander, Heracles, Ambrosius Firmilian, Gregory Thaumaturgos, Athanodorus, Cyprian, Dionycus, Nepos Methodius. Arnobius, Lactantius, Paul of Samosata, Pamphilus, Eusebius, Athanasius, Gregory Nazienzen, Gregory Nyssen, Didymus, Basil, Apollinarius, Epiphanius, Jerome, Evagrius, Theophilus, Ambrose, Chrysostom, Augustine, Isodorus Rufinus, Anastasius, Theodosius, Augustine Theodorus, Theodoret, Synesius, Jerome, and Hilary. That the opinion of these men on any important point is not deserving of any great weight, and ought not to be considered sufficient to settle any disputed subject of great importance, is evident from the following facts:

1. They were not inspired men. We might as well, therefore, appeal to the opinions of John Calvin, Martin Luther, and a host of others who have lived since their day, as to appeal to the opinions of either the Christian or Apostolic Fathers. Yea, we may as well trust to our own opinions as to trust to theirs.

2. In relation to some very important points, they differed among themselves. If we appeal to their testimony, then, we can prove Calvinism to be true, and we can prove it to be false. We can prove Arminianism to be false, and we can prove it to be true. We can prove Universalism to be a doctrine of devils, and we can prove it to be the truth of God. Who cannot see that such testimony defeats itself?

3. The Christian Fathers were no more competent, nor any better qualified, to understand the scriptures of the Old and New Testament, than we are at the present day. Indeed, they were not as much so, as their writings prove. The most distinguished of them were converts from some one of the various schools of heathen philosophy; and when they came over to Christianity, they brought many of their philosophical opinions with them. These they incorporated and blended with the Christian religion, and made up a system of theology, composed partly of Christianity and partly of heathen philosophy. They were in the habit of allegorizing and mystifying the Scriptures, instead of understanding them in their plain and obvious sense. This, of course, would have an effect to bewilder their minds, and prevent the light of truth from shining into their understandings. They were comparatively ignorant of the peculiar style and phraseology of the Hebrew language, which style was adopted by Christ and his apostles; and they were ignorant of all just rules of interpretation. By the aid of the light which has been thrown upon the various sciences since the days of these fathers, we enjoy better means and greater facilities for arriving at the true sense and meaning of the Scriptures than they did.

4. Of the writings of the Apostolic Fathers, and of the early Christian Fathers, some are known to be forgeries, and the authenticity of others is very doubtful. Of those which are genuine, many of them are compositions such as any school-boy ought to be ashamed of, and contain within themselves certain evidence that the writers were either very weak, credulous or superstitious men, or most notorious liars. The book called The Sibylline Oracles was forged by some Christian or Christians, and palmed off upon the heathen as genuine. The Sibyls were supposed by the Greeks and Romans to be very ancient prophetesses of extraordinary inspiration; and this book was fabricated and ascribed to them, and then "sent into the world to convert the heathen by the pretended testimony of their own prophetesses. It is mortifying to relate that not one of the defenders of the faith at that day had the honesty to discard the fraud, even when it was detected by their heathen opponents." On the contrary, it was quoted as genuine; and its teachings urged as incontrovertible evidence by all the principal writers of that day; even by such men as Justin Martyr, Athanagoras, Theophilus of Antioch, Clemens Alexandrinus, and the succeeding fathers. The genuineness of the epistles of Ignatius "has been attacked and defended with a zeal little proportioned to their worth or real weight in any cause whatever." And The Relation of the Martyrdom of Polycarp is thought to be a forgery. Justin Martyr was a man who lacked sober judgment; and was guilty of frequent mistakes in consequence of his carelessness and gross credulity. He believed in the existence of demons, and that they were the fruit of a connection between angels and women. He also believed that the Christians had power to exorcise the demons at pleasure. In fine, all his early heathen notions were only modified to his new religion. He "applied and explained scripture without the least regard to rational interpretation." But we need not particularize. The fact is, that the writings of the Christian Fathers show, conclusively, that many of them were weak men; that all of them were extremely credulous; that they believed in demons, giants, and a thousand other vagaries which never had any existence except in the imagination of man. Even the great Origen himself believed that miracles might be performed by simply pronouncing the name Jesus. And the early fathers, "who, by the interposition of evil spirits, could so readily explain every preternatural appearance, were disposed, and even desirous, to admit, and did admit, the most extravagant fictions of the Pagan mythology." The early fathers appealed to what they called apostolic traditions to prove opposite doctrines, even when those pretended traditions were self-contradictory, and, therefore, of no authority whatever. Even those who are said to have been the disciples of the apostles, "adduced contrary traditions on one and the same point." Polycarp visited Anicetus, bishop at Rome, about A. D. 150, and held an amicable discussion with him on the proper time for holding Easter. Each alleged apostolical tradition for his own time, in opposition to that of the other. See Eusebius' Eccl., lib. v., chap. 24, and Ancient History of Universalism, chap. 2. But there is one fact, which, if there were no other, would be sufficient of itself to show that no importance ought to be attached to the teachings of the Christian Fathers. It is this:

5. The Christian Fathers were guilty of forging books to prove their doctrines of believing what they did not teach, and of teaching what they did not believe. They sometimes employed known falsehood in support of their cause. "This pernicious artifice they are said to have derived from the Platonic paradox, that it is lawful to lie for the truth; but one would suppose it suggested by their own intemperate zeal, rather than by any maxims of philosophy. They forged books in support of their religion; a practice which it is said they borrowed from the heretics; and they propagated accounts of frequent miracles, concerning which all the earlier writers after the apostles had been silent." The following extracts from the writings of Tertullian will give some idea of the character of the man. "Why am I not ashamed of maintaining that the Son of God was born? Why? because it is itself a shameful thing. I maintain that the Son of God died. Well, that is wholly credible, because it is monstrously absurd. I maintain that after having been buried he rose again; and that I take to be absolutely true, because it is manifestly impossible." "You are fond of your spectacles," said he, in allusion to the Pagans; "there are other spectacles: that day disbelieved, derided by the nations, that last and eternal day of judgment, when all ages shall be swallowed up in one conflagration, — what a variety of spectacles shall then appear! How shall I admire, how laugh, how rejoice, how EXULT, when I behold so many kings, worshipped as gods in heaven, together with Jove himself, groaning in the lowest abyss of darkness! so many magistrates, who persecuted the name of the Lord, liquefying in fiercer flames than they ever kindled against Christians; so many sage philosophers blushing in raging fire, with their scholars whom they persuaded to despise God, and to disbelieve the resurrection; and so many poets shuddering before the tribunal, not of Rhadamanthus, not of Minos, but of the disbelieved Christ! Then shall we hear the tragedians more tuneful under their own sufferings; then shall we see the players far more sprightly amidst the flames; the charioteer all red-hot in his burning car; and the wrestlers hurled, not upon the accustomed list, but on a plain of fire." See Tertul. De Spectaculis, C. 39, and De Spectaculis, C. 30. The opinions of a man who could write such nonsense as is contained in the first extract, or who could possess such a spirit as is manifested in the last, are deserving of no weight whatever. The great ecclesiastical historian, Eusebius, heads chap. 31, of Book 12, of his "Evangelical Preparation," thus: "How far it may be proper to use Falsehood as a Medicine, and for the benefit of those who require to be deceived." And he undertakes to defend the propriety of using falsehood by appealing to pretended examples in the Old Testament. Origen avowed the same principle. See Mosheim's Dissertations, p. 203. Bishop Horsley, in his controversy with Dr. Priestley, states the same fact. At page 160, he says, "Time was when the practice of using unjustifiable means to serve a good cause was openly avowed, and Origen himself was among its defenders." Chrysostom, bishop of Constantinople, defended the same doctrine. See Mosh. Diss., p. 205. Gregory of Nazienzen, surnamed "The Divine," says, "A little jargon is all that is necessary to impose on the people. The less they comprehend the more they admire. Our forefathers and doctors of the church have often said, not what they thought, but what circumstances and necessity dictated to them." Synesius, bishop of Ptolemais, says, "The people are desirous of being deceived. We cannot act otherwise respecting them." And a little further on he says, "For my own part, to myself I shall always be a philosopher; but, in dealing with the mass of mankind, I shall be a priest." See Cave's "Ecclesiastica," p. 115. St. Jerome says, "I do not find fault with an error which proceeds from a hatred towards the Jews, and a pious zeal for the Christian faith." See Opera, tom. 4, p. 113. Mosheim "especially includes in the same charge," Ambrose, bishop of Milan;

Hilary, bishop of Poictiers, and Augustine, bishop of Hippo, in Africa, "whose fame," says Mosheim, "filled, not without reason, the whole Christian world. We would willingly," he adds, "except them from this charge; but truth, which is more respectable than these venerable fathers" (amen), "obliges us to involve them in the general accusation." Dr. Chapman, in his "Miscellaneous Tracts," page 191, says, "The learned Mosheim, a foreign divine and zealous advocate for Christianity, who, by his writings, has deserved the esteem of all good and learned men, intimates his fears that those who search with any degree of attention into the writings of the fathers and most holy doctors of the fourth century, will find them all, without exception, disposed to lie and deceive, whenever the interests of religion require it." "The learned Dodwell," in a work published by him, "abstains from producing more proofs of ancient Christian forgeries," "through his great veneration for the goodness and piety of the fathers." What a strange and inconsistent reason was this!

For publishing the above facts to the world we may be censured by some, but we have long since adopted the maxim, "let the truth be told though the heavens fall;" and the above facts being truths, we fearlessly proclaim them. In relation to those who would censure us for so doing, we have only to say, their opinions are of no more consequence than the opinions of the Christian Fathers themselves. Such, reader, was the character and such was the conduct of the Christian Fathers. And yet they have been called "Christian Fathers." That very title which Jesus instructed his disciples to apply to no man on earth, has been applied to them; even by those who profess to be the disciples of Christ. They have been called "pious saints," and "most holy fathers." But, if such conduct as they were guilty of does not manifest depravity, then we have no evidence that depravity exists in any man on earth. If they were deserving of these high and honorable titles, where is the man who is not? They have been sainted and canonized, and their intercession in behalf of sinners has been supplicated by those calling themselves Christians. And to this day their authority is thought, by Catholics and Episcopalians, to be very important in settling controverted points of doctrine. These, then, are to be our oracles, are they? No; we acknowledge no oracles except the oracles of God, contained in the Old and New Testament. These are to be our authorities on points of doctrine, are they? No; we acknowledge no authority but that of nature, reason and the Bible. These are our interpreters of the Bible, are they? No; we are Protestants, and will interpret the Bible for ourselves. These are our masters, are they? No; we acknowledge no master but Christ. These are our intercessors before the throne of God, are they? No; we want but one intercessor and that intercessor is Jesus. These are our advocates before God, are they? No; we want but one advocate with the Father, and that advocate is Jesus Christ. These are mediators between us and God, are they? No; we acknowledge but one mediator, and that mediator is "the man Christ Jesus." These are our spiritual fathers, are they? No; we acknowledge but one spiritual Father, and that Father is God. People may talk and prate about the pious, and holy, and Christian Fathers, as much as they will; but the fact is, these are only high-sounding titles and phrases, which can serve no other purpose but to deceive, delude, and to impose upon mankind. And any church, which has no other foundation to rest on but the authority of such men, must eventually be shaken to its very foundation; and its extravagant and arrogant claims and pretensions will be discarded by every rational man.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Articles of Faith, Plan of Church Government, and Statistics of the Denomination of Universalists in the United States and British Provinces.

ARTICLES OF FAITH.

The following article on this subject, written by Rev. A. B. Grosh, is full, clear and comprehensive, and much better than anything which we could substitute in its stead.

"The Universalists, as a body, have no Creed or Confession of Faith which members must subscribe, or profess faith in, before they can be admitted into fellowship or membership. The Bible is the creed of the Universalist. But as we have been, at various periods, much misrepresented by our opposers, a Profession of Belief, embracing those important points of doctrine in which all Universalists are agreed, became necessary.* The General Convention of

* "As the Universalists of the New England States agreed with Congregationalists, in regard to church government, they could not be legally distinguished from them, so as to avoid paying taxes to support the then 'standing order,' until they became a separate denomination, and made a formal Profession of Faith. In New Hampshire they were so taxed, and the Supreme Court decided in favor of the Congregationalists, as late, we think, as 1803. To obviate this difficulty, which had been anticipated, a 'Profession of Faith' was presented by the committee, previously appointed for that purpose, and adopted by the General Convention, holden at Winchester, N. H. The members of the committee were Zebulon Streeter, Geo. Richards, Hosea Ballou, Zephaniah Laithe, and Walter Ferris; the Profession was composed by the last on the committee. There were some believers Universalists for the New England States and others, at that time the highest official body in our order, in 1803, adopted and published the following, not as binding on the faith of its members, but as declarative of our sentiments. No alterations have been necessary, neither have any been made in it, since that period. It is, therefore, submitted to the reader as an official and correct declaration of the faith of our denomination at large, wherever it is known to exist, whether under the name of Salvationist, Restorationist, Christian Friends, or the more common and more appropriate one for all believers in impartial and universal grace, UNIVERSALISTS."

"1. We believe that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God, and of the duty, interest and final destination, of mankind.

"2. We believe there is one God, whose nature is love; revealed in one Lord Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of Grace, who will finally restore the whole family of mankind to holiness and happiness.

"3. We believe that holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected; and that believers ought to maintain order, and practise good works, for these things are good and profitable unto men."

"This general declaration of the general belief of our whole order, it will be seen, allows great latitude of opinion on minor points, while it especially states our sentiments on all points most important and useful to all Christians."

Lest it should be thought that the above Profession of Faith is too brief, and not sufficiently expressive of our views on all points connected with the Christian religion, we here insert a form of faith which was drawn up by Rev. D. Skinner, and which has been published and extensively circulated in the United States; premising, however, that we do not consider this creed as binding on the consciences of our fellow-men, but as "a mere general declaration, not of the things which must be believed, but of the things that are believed among us." To obtain the fellowship of our denomination it is only necessary that the individual should believe in one God; in Jesus Christ as the Sent of God and the Saviour of the world; in the trinity and in future punishment on the committee, and yet all could cordially agree to the Articles presented." See an article on this subject in the Magazine and Advocate, vol. 14, No. 40, taken from the Universalist Watchman.

in the authority of the Bible; and that he should possess a good moral character.

BIBLE CREED.

Article I. — Concerning God. — We believe in one, only living and true God; that he is a pure spirit, self-existent, immutable, eternal, infinite in wisdom, power and goodness, and possesses every natural and moral perfection which can render his character amiable, lovely, reverend and adorable; that he is the Creator, Upholder, Benefactor and moral Governor, of the universe; that he stands in the relation of Father to all mankind; that, as he hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth, we are his offspring, — all have one Father, one God hath created us; that though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be gods many, and lords many), yet to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; that God is love, good unto all, and his tender mercies are over all his works; that he loveth all the things that are, and abhorreth nothing that his hands have made, for he never would have created anything to have hated it; that he is a just God and a Saviour, who will have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; that he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; that all his attributes harmonize; that in him mercy and truth have met together, righteousness and peace have embraced each other. 1 Cor. 8: 4—6; Deut. 6: 4; Mark 12: 29; John 4: 24; Mal. 2: 10, and 3: 6; Gen. 17: 1; Ps. 147: 5; 45: 9, and 85: 10; Wisdom 11: 24; Isa. 45: 21; Acts 17: 24—28; 1 Tim. 2: 4, 5; Eph. 1: 11; 1 John 4: 8—16.

Article II. — Concerning Christ. — We believe in one Lord Jesus Christ; that Jesus of Nazareth is the promised Messiah, the one Mediator between God and men, the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person; that to him the Divine Spirit was given without measure, and hence, God hath made him both Lord and Christ — given all things into his hand, even power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him; that all that the Father giveth him shall so come to him as not to be cast out; that he was sent to reveal the true character of God to the world, and save mankind from sin, misery, darkness and death; that, to this end, he gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time; is a propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world; that, having been crucified on the cross, he arose from the dead on the third day, ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, and giving gifts unto men; and having brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel, he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied; shall reconcile all things unto God, by the blood of his cross; that as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; that he shall reign in his mediatorial kingdom till all things shall be subdued unto him; till death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed; till every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess him Lord, to the glory of God the Father; and that he will then deliver up the kingdom to God the Father, that God may be all in all. 1 Cor. 8: 6, and 15: 3, 4, 22, 24—28; 1 Tim. 2: 5, 6; 1 John 2: 2, and 4: 14; John 1: 45; 3: 34, 35; 6: 37, and 17: 2, 3; Matt. 1: 21; Heb. 1: 3; Rom. 14: 9; Eph. 4: 8; 2 Tim. 1: 10; Isa. 53. 11; Col. 1: 20; Phil. 2: 10, 11.

Article III. — Concerning the Scriptures. — We believe in the Divine authenticity of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, that they contain a true and faithful record of the revelation of God to men, and are a perfect and infallible rule of faith and practice; that the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; and that all Scripture, given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and instruction in righteousness, that the servants of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works, and become wise unto salvation. 2 Peter 1: 21; 2 Tim. 3: 15—17.

Article IV. — Concerning the Motive to Obedience. — We believe that, as God hath commended his love to us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us, it is our duty to love him because he first loved us; that if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another; that the goodness of God leadeth to repentance; that the grace of God, which bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world; and that those who believe in God, ought to be careful to maintain good works; for these things are good and profitable unto men; that Christ should be our pattern, and his love should constrain us to walk in his footsteps. Rom. 2 : 4, and 5 : 8; 2 Cor. 5 : 14, 15; Tit. 2 : 11, 12, and 3 : 8; 1 John 4 : 11, 19.

Article V. — Concerning the Reward of Obedience. — We believe that great peace have they who love God's law, and nothing shall offend them; they are like trees planted by the rivers of water, that bring forth their fruit in season; their leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever they do shall prosper; that Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace; that she is a tree of life to them that lay hold of her, and happy is every one that retaineth her; that the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace; that Christ's yoke is easy and his burden light, and all who come to him will find rest to their souls; that we who have believed do enter into rest; that, though God is the Saviour of all men, he is especially so of the believer, and that whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, and is not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed. Ps. 1 : 3, and 119 : 165; Prov. 3 : 17, 18; Matt. 11 : 28—30; Heb. 4 : 3; 1 Tim. 4 : 10; James 1 : 25, and 3 : 18.

Article VI. — Concerning the Punishment of Disobedience. — We believe that God, as the righteous and moral Governor of the universe, will render to every man according to his deeds: tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first and also of the Gentile; that he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done, and there is no respect of persons; that the way of transgressors is hard; that the wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; for there is no peace, saith our God, to the wicked. Rom. 2 : 6, 9; Col. 3 : 25; Prov. 13 : 15; Matt. 16 : 27; Isa. 57 : 20, 21.

Article VII. — Concerning the remedial Design and Limitation of Punishment. — We believe the Lord will not cast off forever; but though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies; that he will not contend forever, nor be always wroth, lest the spirit should fail before him, and the souls he has made; that although he may apparently forsake his children for a small moment, yet with great mercies will he gather them; in a little wrath he may hide his face from them for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will he have mercy on them, and heal them, and lead them also, and restore comforts unto them; that whom he loveth he chasteneth (and he loveth and chasteneth all) for their profit, that they may be partakers of his holiness, and be enabled afterwards to say, "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word." Lam. 3: 31, 32; Isa. 54: 7, 8, and 57: 16—18; Heb. 12: 7—11; Ps. 89: 30—35, and 119: 67.

Article VIII. — Concerning Baptism. — As there is a difference of opinion among the sincere followers of Christ, in regard to this ordinance, and this difference ought not to separate true disciples one from another, we believe it is the duty of every one to follow the dictates of his or her conscience, leaving each to judge both of the subject and mode of Baptism, as shall seem most consistent with Scripture and reason. Matt. 28: 19; John 4: 2; Acts 2: 41; Rom. 6: 3—5, and 14: 1—6; 1 Cor. 1: 14—17; 1 Pet. 3: 21.

Article IX. — Concerning Repentance, Faith and Love. — We believe, according to the divine doctrine and preaching of Christ and his apostles, that repentance toward God for sin, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and love to God and our fellow-creatures, are means of grace appointed by God, and essential to our salvation, and glory. Matt. 4: 16, and 22: 37—40; Mark 1: 15; Acts 3: 19, 5: 31, and 20: 21; Heb. 11: 6; 1 John 3: 23, 24.

Article X. — Concerning the Extent of Salvation. — We believe that God, who is rich in mercy, who turneth the hearts of the children of men as the rivers of water are turned, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, whose people shall be willing in the day of his power, will, in the dispensation of the fulness of times, gather together in one all things, in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him; and that every (intelligent) creature in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, shall at last unite in the song of Moses and the Lamb, saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Eph. 1: 9—11, and 2: 4; Prov 21: 1; Ps. 110: 3; Rev. 5: 13.

PLAN OF GOVERNMENT.

The following article, taken from the Universalist Register and Almanac for 1836, and written by A. B. Grosh, is as clear and correct on this subject as can possibly be desired.

"The government and discipline of the Universalist denomination, so far as it has yet been established on general principles, is republican and fraternal — in accordance with the mild, equalizing and affectionate principles of Christianity.

"The smallest associations are those called churches and societies. These are formed by any number of believers in a vicinity, according to the laws of the State or Territory, or to the customs of the community where there are no legal regulations on the subject. Brother is the common and equal title of all the male members, as sister is that of the females. Where discipline is instituted among societies only, it is, as it should be, a church discipline, and conducted according to the rules laid down in the New Testament — particularly as recommended in Matt. 5: 23, 24; 7: 12; 18: 15—23; and the parallel passages. It is to be hoped that, ere long, every society will establish such a discipline among its members.

"The societies are sovereign and independent — competent to govern themselves, select and discharge their own officers and preachers. But for social purposes, and to promote unity and harmony among and with each other, in certain districts they unite themselves into "Associations. — These are governed by a council, composed, in general, of two or more delegates from each society, and of the ministering brethren residing within the bounds of the Association. The delegates are elected annually, by their respective churches or societies. Ministering brethren from other Associations are either constitutionally admitted as members of the council, or are invited to unite in its deliberations. The discipline instituted over preachers and societies, by the Associations, is similar to that of churches or societies, except where gross offences are committed by preachers, when immediate suspension or expulsion is pronounced; and in no case is any further authority assumed than the withdrawal of fellowship.

"The power to grant letters of fellowship or ordination, or both, in general belongs to every regularly associated body of believers in the order; but of late years is only exercised by the Associations and Conventions, or by ordaining councils, or committees on fellowship and ordination appointed by them, or acting at the wishes of a society in presumed accordance with the wishes of those bodies.

"In all other matters the Associations merely advise or recommend, leaving to societies and individuals the privilege of acting or not, as circumstances or their own judgments may dictate and require. When Associations become numerous in any one or more States, they generally unite, to extend their social intercourse and influence in "CONVENTIONS. — These are State or sectional, as one or more States are embraced within their boundaries. Their councils are generally constituted of a certain number of lay, and a certain number of ministerial delegates sent by each Association in their fellowship. Generally, the lay delegates are most numerous — but in some Conventions an equal number of each are required. The powers of these Conventions, except in granting fellowship and ordination, in suspending preachers and withdrawing fellowship from them, are merely recommendatory and advisory.

"When State Conventions become numerous, they sometimes unite in a General Convention embracing several States. Thus, formerly, the New England States had a General Convention (even before any State Conventions were formed), and the Southern and Western have formed similar Conventions. But the largest organized body of Universalists in America is

"THE UNITED STATES CONVENTION. Its council is composed of delegates chosen annually by each Convention in its fellowship, each State being allowed four ministerial and six lay delegates. It meets annually, in each State alternately, and continues its session until its business is transacted. Its powers are merely recommendatory and advisory. If its organization be reckoned from the formation of the 'General Convention of the New England States and others,' which it superseded, then the session in September, 1853, was its sixty-eighth Anniversary."

STATISTICS OF THE DENOMINATION.

United States. — In 29 States and Territories of the Union there are 19 State Conventions, beside 16 State Organizations for other than governmental and disciplinary purposes, 84 Ecclesiastical Associations, beside 8 Associational Organizations for Missionary and other purposes; 16 Periodicals, beside 4 Annuals; 10 Books published within the last year; 10 Schools under denominational patronage; 1097 Churches or Societies, not including churches organized within societies; 837 Houses of Worship owned wholly or in part by the denomination; and 612 Preachers.

These are united in a national organization called the United States Convention, to which is attached a national Historical Society, and a General Reform Association.

British Provinces. — One Association, 15 Societies, 7 Meeting-houses, and 5 Preachers.

Total for North America. — One General Convention and two National Organizations for Historical and Reformatory purposes; 19 State or Territorial Conventions, and 16 other State Organizations for Missionary, Tract and Educational objects; 85 Associations, and 8 Associational Organizations for general objects; 20 Periodicals, including annuals; 10 Schools, 1112 Churches and Societies; 844 Houses of Worship, 619 Preachers.

Of the clergy of our denomination it may with truth be said, that, generally speaking, in point of natural and acquired abilities, moral character and literary and scientific attainments, they are at least respectable. In their political principles they are purely democratic; the advocates of free toleration and equal rights, and the champions of civil and religious liberty. The same is also true of the lay members of the denomination.

As a denomination of professing Christians, we entertain sentiments of the utmost liberality and charity towards all Christian sects. We extend the hand of fellowship to all professing the Christian name who walk worthy of their vocation. When clergymen of other denominations are present at our meetings, they are invited into our pulpits and to take a part in the services. At the administration of the Lord's Supper our opposing brethren are always invited to partake with us; and our Meeting-houses are open and free to all denominations when not occupied by us.

Gain of the Denomination in nine years. — In 1835 there were in the United States and British Provinces, so far as could be ascertained, 661 Societies, 246 Meeting-houses, and 311 Preachers. From that time to the present we have gained 437 Societies, 638 Meeting-houses, and 308 Preachers.

Probable Number of Universalists in America. — The number of those who openly avow their belief in Universalism in this country, and of those who manifest a preference for that religious persuasion, cannot be less than 800,000, and is probably much greater. In addition to these, it is known that Universalism is believed by some of the Unitarians of this country, both of the clergy and laity; that a belief in this doctrine prevails to a considerable extent among the Hicksite Quakers, and that it is generally embraced by the Shakers, and by the Tunkers or German Baptists. Besides, there are undoubtedly many believers in Universalism to be found in all the different denominations in the country. Prof. Stuart, of Andover College, in a late work against Universalism, says that many members of Orthodox churches in the New England States seriously doubt the doctrine of endless punishment, and that some, both of the clergy and laity, entertain a secret belief in universal salvation. Rev. Wilbur Fisk, of the Methodist church, in a sermon against Universalism preached before the New England Conference in 1823, says, "The eternity of future rewards and punishments is a subject which, at the present, excites among us considerable attention. In consequence of the plausible objections that are made to the doctrine of endless misery, the minds of many serious, candid people have become unsettled." He also speaks of some "whose feelings have become neutralized by the arguments of the contending parties, and who are looking on with dangerous indifference." The celebrated Dr. Beecher calls Universalism, "the giant heresy of the day."

Universalism in Europe. — In England, Ireland and Scotland, there are some congregations of Universalists, as also some preachers who belong to that sect. The Unitarians of these countries openly avow their belief in, and boldly preach the doctrine of, universal salvation. In Germany it is well known that this doctrine prevails almost universally. Dwight, in his "Travels in the North of Germany, in 1825 and 1826," says of the Germans, that "they have done more to enlarge the knowledge of sacred criticism, than all the nations of Europe. In this respect, they are a century in advance of England and of every other nation." P. 334. On page 421 he says, that in Germany "the doctrine of the Eternity of Future Punishment is almost UNIVERSALLY REJECTED. I have seen but ONE person in Germany who believed it, and but one other whose mind was wavering on this subject."

Facts in relation to the History of Universalism.—From the time of the death of the apostle John, which happened about A. D. 100, to the year 150, the history of opinions entertained by Christians respecting the final destiny of the human race, is involved in much obscurity. But little is known except that the doctrine of the final happiness of all men was held by the different sects of Gnostics, viz., the Basilidians, the Carpocratians, and the Valentinians. And although these sects were regarded as heretics by the orthodox fathers, and although these fathers "warmly and bitterly attacked their respective systems in general," yet, "it does not appear that they ever selected the particular tenet of the salvation of all souls as obnoxious."

In the year 140, or 150, a belief in Universalism was distinctly avowed in a work, which was the production of some Christian or Christians, called the "Sibylline Oracles."

Of the orthodox fathers, who lived between 150 and 210, some believed in Universalism, while others held to the doctrine of endless misery. "This diversity of opinion, however, occasioned no divisions, no controversies nor contentions among them; and both sentiments existed together in the church without reproach."

From the year 230 to 553, Universalism was believed and advocated by a number of the most learned, pious and distinguished fathers that the church ever produced.

Tertullian, a presbyter of Carthage, in Africa, was the first Christian writer who asserted and maintained the doctrine that the misery of the wicked will be of equal duration with the happiness of the righteous. This doctrine he defended in a work published by him in the year 204.

Universalism was never condemned by any Christian writer, either orthodox or heretic, till the year 394.

"In the year 394 a quarrel broke out between the followers of the celebrated Origen and their opponents, in which some of the latter attacked, for the first time, the particular tenet of the ultimate salvation of the Devil, but did not at first object to the final salvation of all men.

"In 399, some of the councils that were convened against the Origenists, condemned expressly the doctrine of the salvation of the Devil and his angels, though they passed by the belief of the salvation of all mankind without a censure."

Universalism was not officially condemned by the church until the Fifth General Council, which was held at Constantinople in the year 553. See "Ancient History of Universalism," and "Plain Guide to Universalism."

Notwithstanding this authoritative condemnation of Universalism, the doctrine still continued to be held and maintained in the church until the establishment of Popery.

From the time of the condemnation of Universalism by the Fifth General Council, the church gradually sunk into ignorance, superstition, and moral darkness, until at last spiritual despotism and tyranny reigned triumphant.

From the time of the breaking out of the Protestant Reformation to the present time, Universalism has been believed and advocated by some of the most distinguished divines, theologians and philosophers, of all the different prominent sects in Christendom.

The Manicheans, a very powerful and influential sect, which flourished from the year 265 even to the time of the Reformation, held the doctrine of Universalism.

During the reign of Popery, Universalism was held by the Albanenses, the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the Paulicians, and the Lollards. It is thought that these sects all descended from the Manicheans. Neither of them ever submitted to or acknowledged the authority of the Pope.

Universalists, as a distinct denomination, were known in England as early as 1770.

The first Universalist preacher in the United States was Dr. George De Benneville. He came to this country in 1741.

The first Universalist society in the United States was formed between the years 1771 and 1780.

The first Universalist paper was published in England in 1793.

The first Universalist paper in the United States was published at Boston, Mass., in 1802. The first weekly paper was commenced in 1819.

The General Convention of Universalists of the United States was formed in 1785.

List of distinguished Individuals who were Universalists.— Previous to the Reformation, Universalism was believed and advocated by the following individuals; many of them the most eminent of the Christian Fathers: Basilides, Carpocrates, Valentine, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Alexander, bishop of Jerusalem, Ambrosius, Gregory Thaumaturgus, Titus, bishop of Bostra, Basil the Great, bishop of Cesarea, Gregory, bishop of Nyssa, Didymus, Jerome, Gregory, bishop of Nazienzus, Evagrius Ponticus, Diodorus, bishop of Tarsus, Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia, John, bishop of Jerusalem, Victorinus, Nonnus, Leontius, Domitian, Theodorus Ascidas, Clement, Rainold, Walter Lollard.

It may be proper to remark that most of the above individuals were believers in future punishment, and that they freely applied the terms everlasting and eternal to punishment, not, however, to express its endless, but its indefinite duration.

Since the era of the Reformation, Universalism has been held by the following eminent persons, who have lived at different periods of time and in different countries.

In England, it has been advocated by Gerard Winstanly, William Everard, Rev. William Earbury, Rev. Richard Coppin, Samuel Richardson, Rev. Jeremy White, Dr. Henry More, Archbishop Tillotson, Dr. Thomas Burnet, William Whiston, Sir Isaac Newton, Rev. Dr. Samuel Clarke, Dr. George Cheyne, Chevalier Ramsay, Mrs. Jane Leadley, Rev. Richard Clarke, Rev. William Law, William Duncombe, Rev. Samuel Say, Soame Jenyns, Henry Brooke, Dr. Andrew Kippis, Dr. William Paley, Rev. Robert Robinson, Rev. Geo. Walker, Dr. John Coakley Lettsom, Dr. John Hey, Dr. David Hartley, Abraham Tucker, Rev. Thomas Broughton, Bishop Thomas Newton, Sir George Stonehouse, John Henderson, Dr. Nathan Drake, Dr. James Brown, Rev. William Matthews, Rev. Francis Leicester, Rev. Edward Holmes, Rev. Rochemont Barbauld, Mrs. Ann Letitia Barbauld, Rev. John Brown, Rev. Theophilus Lindsey, Rev. Dr. Joseph Priestley, Dr. John Jebb, Rev. John Simpson, Rev. In Scotland, by Duncan Forbes, Rev. James Purves, Rev. Niel Douglass, Rev. William Worrall, Rev. James Edmands, Rev. Dr. Thomas Southwood Smith, and Rev. George Harris.

In Ireland, by Bishop George Rust.

In Germany, by John William Peterson, Boetius or Balduin, professors of Divinity, Paul Siegvolk, Mr. Marsay, Gruner, Eberhard, Steinhart, Fuller, Semler, Crellius, Fisher, Shetz, and Shepherd, and is now held by a majority of the clergy and laity.

In Prussia, by Paul Jeremiah Bitaube and Rev. Herman Andrew Pistorius.

In France, by Rev. Thomas Cuppe, James Necker, Chais de Sourcesol, Dr. Geo. de Benneville, Durant, De la Chevrette, Dumoulin, L'Archer, &c.

In Switzerland, by Murault, Charles Bonnet, Rev. Ferdinand Oliver Petitpiere, Rev. John Gosper Lavater, and Carbo a Cortiaro.

The following individuals are known to have doubted the doctrine of endless misery, and to have been favorable to Universalism: Fenelon, Daniel De Foe, Dr. Isaac Watts, Dr. Philip Doddridge, Simon Episcopius, John Le Clere, Rev. C. L. de Villette, Archbishop Newcome, Dr. Edward Young, Dr. Samuel Johnson, Dr. James Macknight, and others. There are some very good reasons for believing that the celebrated John Wesley was a Universalist. 1. He was one of those who requested Dr. Stonehouse to write a work in defence of Universalism. 2. "A work in which Universalism was taught (Brooks' 'Fool of Quality'), was republished under Mr. Wesley's supervision." 3. He republished a work by Charles Bonnett, entitled "Conjectures concerning the nature of Future Happiness," in which the same doctrine is inculcated. 4. The latter work "he introduced to the public with the following prefatory commendation:"

"Dublin, April 7, 1787.

"To the Reader: I am happy in communicating to men of sense in this Kingdom, and at a very low price, one of the most sensible tracts I ever saw. JOHN WESLEY."

If the reader will examine the Ancient and Modern Histories of Universalism, and Stone's "Life of Winchester," he will find the above facts established by quotations from the writings of the individuals named, and by authorities which are indisputable.

DIFFERENCE IN THE BELIEF OF PARTIALISTS AND UNIVERSALISTS.

All the various denominations of professing Christians may be classed under three heads: Calvinists, Arminians, and Universalists. The agreement and the difference in the religious opinions of these three classes on the most important doctrines of Christianity may be stated as follows: —

CALVINISM.	ARMINIANISM.	UNIVERSALISM.
There is one God.	There is one God.	There is one God.
There is one Mediator between God and men, and that Mediator is the very and eternal God himself.	There is one Mediator between God and men, and that Mediator is the very and eternal God himself.	There is one Mediator between God and men, and that Mediator is "the MAN Christ Jesus."
The one Mediator gave himself a ransom for a part only of mankind.	The one Mediator gave himself a ransom for all.	The one Mediator gave himself a ransom for all.
All those for whom the Mediator died will be saved.	A part only of those for whom the Mediator died will be saved.	All those for whom the Mediator died will be saved.
God's purposes in the creation of the human race embraced the final holiness and happiness of a part, and the endless misery of the rest.	God's purposes in the creation of the human race embraced the final holiness and happiness of all mankind.	God's purposes in the creation of the human race embraced the final holiness and happiness of all mankind.
God's purpose in reference to the final destiny of his creatures cannot be defeated.	God's purpose in reference to the final destiny of a part of his creatures will be defeated.	God's purpose in reference to the final destiny of his creatures cannot be defeated.
God has the power to make all his creatures holy and happy.	God has not the power to make all his creatures holy and happy.	God has the power to make all his creatures holy and happy.
God wills the salvation of a part of his creatures, and the damnation of the rest.	God wills the salvation of all his creatures.	God wills the salvation of all his creatures.
God's will in reference to the ultimate destiny of his creatures will be done.	God's will in reference to the ultimate destiny of a part of his creatures will not be done.	God's will in reference to the ultimate destiny of his creatures will be done.
God can save all mankind, but will not.	God would save all mankind, but cannot.	God can save all mankind, and will.
The object of Christ's mission to our world was to save a part only of mankind from endless misery.	The object of Christ's mission to our world was to save all mankind from endless misery.	The object of Christ's mission to our world was to save all mankind from their sins.
Christ will succeed in accomplishing the object of his mission.	Christ will succeed in accomplishing a part only of the object of his mission.	Christ will succeed in accomplishing the object of his mission.

CALVINISM.	ARMINIANISM.	UNIVERSALISM.
All for whom Christ died will be saved.	Some for whom Christ died will not be saved.	All for whom Christ died will be saved.
A glorious and happy destiny awaits a portion of the human race, and a most inglorious, unhappy and miserable destiny awaits the rest.	A glorious and happy destiny awaits a portion of the human race, and a most inglorious, unhappy and miserable destiny awaits the rest.	A glorious and happy destiny awaits every individual of the entire human race.
Universalism is altogether preferable to Arminianism.	Universalism is altogether preferable to Calvinism.	Universalism is infinitely preferable to either Calvinism or Arminianism.

Arminianism is supposed by thousands to be a much more consistent and reasonable system of theology than Calvinism. But who cannot see that both systems result in precisely the same thing? Arminianism damns as many as Calvinism, and the Arminian's hell is equally as horrible as the Calvinist's. What boots it then, reader, whether you go to an endless hell by the irreversible degree of the Almighty, or by the use of an agency which God gave you, and which he knew you would use to your own destruction? In other words, what difference will it make with you whether you are lost, and lost forever, because God cannot save you, or because he will not? The truth is, that between Calvinism and Arminianism there is not one cent to choose, but between either of these systems and that of Universalism the difference is infinite. And no man can fail to see that Universalism is infinitely the best.

MISTAKES OF PARTIALISTS CONCERNING UNIVERSALISTS.

"Universalists do not believe in a hell."—That we do not believe in an endless hell is very true. But we believe in all the hell taught in the Bible. We also believe that there is no hell taught in the Bible but what is destined to be destroyed.

"Universalists do not believe in a devil."—It is true we do not believe in the personal existence of an all-powerful evil spirit, such as is believed in by our Limitarian friends, and by them called the devil. Yet we believe in all the devil and devils taught in the Bible. If there are any worse devils than wicked men, the lusts and passions of men, and the spirit of wickedness, we profess to be entirely ignorant of their existence. Nor can we find the existence of any worse ones taught in the Bible. We know of the existence of no devil that is not destined to be destroyed.

"Universalists do not believe in the atonement."—That we do not believe in the doctrine of atonement as it is taught in the creeds and commandments of men, we have no disposition to deny. At the same time we profess to believe in it as it is taught in the Bible. The difference between us and our opposers is, we believe it was to reconcile man to God that Jesus died upon the cross; they, that it was to reconcile God to man.

"Universalists do not believe in any punishment for sin." — So far from this being true, we are the only people on earth who believe that God will in very deed render to every man according to his deeds. We are the only people who do not provide some way for the sinner to escape the just punishment of his sins. We teach that the punishment of sin is certain and sure, and absolutely unescapable and unavoidable.

"Universalists believe that sinners will go to heaven and be saved in their sins." — Not so. We teach that sin is a cause, and misery the effect; that sin and misery are inseparably connected, and that so long as a man is sinful he must be miserable, and there is no escape. The reason why we believe in the eventual salvation of all men is, because we believe that all will be saved from their sins, not in them.

"Universalists do not believe in the new birth." — This is a very great mistake. It is true we do not see anything very miraculous or mysterious in the new birth, nor do we regard it as a radical change of human nature; but yet we profess to believe in it just as it is taught in the Bible.

"Universalism is a very ancient doctrine. It was preached by the serpent in the garden of Eden." — That Universalism is a very ancient doctrine we admit; but that it was taught by the serpent we deny. Do our opponents really think that the serpent taught the doctrine of the final holiness and happiness of all mankind? If they do, let them put their finger on the language used by the serpent in which this sentiment is taught. They cannot do it. We think our opposers are justly obnoxious to the same charge that they bring against us. The serpent taught that punishment for sin was not certain — that some way of escape would be provided. Our opposers teach the same. We teach that punishment for sin is certain and sure, and that there is no way of escape.

"Universalism is a very new doctrine. It never was heard of until quite recently." — We are unable to comprehend how any doctrine can be both old and new at the same time. Besides, this assertion is contrary to facts. History proves that Universalism has been held and advocated in the Christian church from the first establishment of Christianity down to the present time. If it be objected that Universalists, as a distinct denomination, were not known until within one hundred years, this objection bears equally against all Protestant denominations. For all Protestant sects have originated since the era of the Reformation.

"Universalists do not believe that man is a free agent." — If, when you say man is a free agent, you mean that he possesses a self-determining power which enables him to act contrary to his choice; or, if you mean that a man may have one motive to do a thing, and ten thousand motives, each of which are equally as strong as the other, to do the opposite of that thing, and that he can follow the impulse of that one motive directly contrary to the impulse of the ten thousand; we frankly confess we believe in no such thing. But if, when you say man is a free agent, you mean that he is free to act according to his choice, we agree with you. We prefer the term moral agent, however, to that of free agent; and we believe that man is a moral agent in the sense that he is, and will be, rewarded for his virtues and punished for his vices. This certainly is all that any reasonable man can possibly require.

"Universalism is a very licentious doctrine." — This assertion comes directly in contact with facts. In point of moral character we are willing to compare our churches and societies with the same number of churches and societies of any other denomination whatever. Indeed, it is admitted by those of our opposers who have had any opportunity for observing that in such a comparison we would by no means suffer. The following extract is taken from the "Olive Branch," of July, 1843, a Protestant Methodist paper, edited by Rev. T. F. Norris, and which has an extensive circulation

"We should be happy to see what we think erroneous in the creed of Universalists refuted and put down, but we never will be a party to an attack on the morals and characters of a class of men, who, as far as we know, stand as high on these points as ANY of their more Orthodox neighbors."

The following extract is from an October (1843) number of that widely-circulated journal, the "New World," published in New York. "It seems to us that the Universalists, in whatever light we may regard their points of doctrine, excel other sects in their benevolence, their philanthropy, and their respect for that law which has commanded us to render good for evil. They endeavor to entice mankind into purity of life, by considerations of love and kindness; they use no threats, and cast from them the bonds of fear. And, so far as our information extends, the professing members of their creed observe a strictness of conduct, and a righteousness of living, which others would do well to emulate, instead of maligning a belief which certainly reposes with entire confidence on God's mercy to his creatures."

Dwight, in his "Travels in the North of Germany," after stating the fact that Universalism is the prevailing belief in Germany, says of the Christian character of the Germans, "I have never seen any Christians who seemed to me to have a deeper sense of the odiousness of sin in the sight of God, or whose hearts beat with more ardent gratitude towards our Saviour, for the great redemption he has made for fallen man. I know of no examples of humility greater than those exhibited by some of these gentlemen, or more elevated views of the character of God than they discover in their conversation. We must look in vain for brighter examples of piety than they exhibit. They certainly manifest a greater spirit of love, for those who differ from them, than is found in most of our sects, and they are unwilling to shut the gates of heaven against all who do not believe in every article of their creeds. In this charity and love the Protestant inhabitants of most countries would do well to imitate them." P. 423.

Such is the testimony of our religious opposers in reference to the tendency of our doctrine, and its influence upon those who believe it. Nor does it appear that the vicious are disposed to take advantage of our doctrine, and to screen themselves under it. If we examine the criminal record of our country, we shall find that Universalists do not furnish even their proportion of criminals in proportion to their numbers compared with other denominations. The state prisons at New York, at Auburn, and at Cincinnati, Ohio, have each of them been examined at different times, and it was ascertained that for one believer in Universalism there were two or three hundred believers in endless misery confined within their walls.

TO THE READER.

Reader. — The subject is before you. Contemplate seriously upon it. If the subject upon which we have been treating is not important, then there is no subject which was ever presented for the consideration of man which is worthy of one single moment's notice. But it is important. Its importance is acknowledged by all. Ponder it well then in your mind, and choose ye which ye will serve. If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him. And now whether you are a Limitarian or a Universalist, whether you are a professor or a non-professor, whether you belong to this, that, or the other sect, or whether you belong to no sect, we pray that if you are wrong you may be righted; if you are right that you may be strengthened and confirmed in the right way. May you be blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. May the Lord keep thee and preserve thee. May he lift upon thee the light of his countenance, and give thee peace. Amen.
